Supreme Court Power Who Started It? John Marshall, Perhaps? Is It Constitutional?

One question may surprise you concerning Supreme Court decisions setting aside laws passed by the Congress and signed by the President on the ground that Congress, in passing the law had exceeded its constitutional authority. This is the question: Are those Supreme Court decisions in themselves, UNCONSTITUTIONAL?

When the Supreme Court, sometimes by a narrow margin of five to four, declares a law unconstitutional and void, is it exceeding its constitutional authority?

Where in the Constitution of the United States do you find authority for the Supreme Court power to overrule Congress and the President in the making of laws—this absence of authority is no accident. Those that wrote the Constitution, after long arguing, disputing and many concessions, knew, presumably, what they wanted the Constitution to say. And they did not want it to give the Supreme Court the power to veto laws, that it now assumes and exercises.

A resolution actually was introduced in the constitutional convention that would have given to the court that veto power. That resolution represented the conservative and aristocratic ideas of Alexander Hamilton. But the constitutional convention which made the Constitution, rejected that suggestion, voted it down, declared that the convention DID NOT INTEND THE SUPREME COURT TO HAVE SUCH OVERWHELMING POWER.

The Supreme Court's supreme power over legislation was a matter of slow growth, and perhaps a deliberate, well meant planning, to rewrite the Constitution, in such a way as to make it recognize the Supreme Court's supreme wisdom.

The learned Chief Justice Marshall wrote one decision after another, declaring certain actions of Congress unconstitutional, and gradually the Supreme Court, independently of the Constitution and in defiance and defeat of constitutional history and the wishes of the writers of the Constitution, assumed on its own authority the right to nullify any decision arrived at by the elected Congress and approved by the elected President.

In other words, he construed the first three lines of section 2, article 3 of the Constitution in such a way as to give to the Supreme Court an authority that the constitutional convention itself, writing the Constitution, had categorically refused to give.

In other words, if the Supreme Court should now render a decision to the effect that abrogation of the "gold clause" by Congress is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court itself might be acting unconstitutionally, for it has no power, under the Constitution, to declare that action by Congress and the President "null and void."

This is rather an important matter that might be settled while other things are being settled.

A Republican form of government would imply that laws made, and approved by ELECTED representatives of the people, should take precedence over decisions of judges APPOINTED by an individual, especially as that individual has the legal power (President Roosevelt, of course, would not exercise it) to get any Supreme Court decision that might suit him, by "packing" the Supreme Court, adding enough members sharing his views.

The average American will agree that if the Supreme Court is allowed to retain its self-attributed power to overrule Congress and the President, it should be required to do so by at least a two-thirds majority, that is to say, four out of the nine judges. When the court reports "five of us think yes, four of us think no," it would seem reasonable to revert to the decision of the elected Congress and President.

As a matter of constitutional law, as actually written by the constitutional convention, if the Supreme Court should say, to the President of the United States, "We find unconstitutional, and ask you to revoke, your law abolishing the gold clause," the President might reasonably reply, "I have your message and respectfully suggest that you show me what part of the Constitution authorizes you to nullify a law passed by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President."

If he sent that message, the Supreme Court would be puzzled, for it could show nothing in the Constitution which is the law of the land, and could only show decisions written first, by Judge Marshall, who thought he knew more than Congress and the President combined, beginning a process that gradually built up the appointed Supreme Court, as a power supreme over the people's elected representa-

BETTY GOW AND JAFSIE DENOUNCED BY REILLY

Freezing the Depression

The Senate appropriations committee seems determined to extract the sound economic safeguards from the President's $4,880,000,000 work relief plan.

The pork barrel philosophy of the majority on the committee was exposed in its vote in favor of an amendment requiring the payment of prevailing wages, instead of the suggested security wage of $50 a month, on all projects in the new re-employment program.

Sounding innocuous enough, this change would tend to FREEZE THE EXISTING UNEMPLOYMENT, and perpetuate the maladjustments which are keeping nearly 10,000,000 persons out of normal employment.

It is a subtle attempt TO RETAIN A STANDING ARMY OF RECIPIENTS OF PUBLIC BENEFITS.

If adopted by Congress, this amendment would vitiate sound efforts to eliminate economic disparities and inequities.

It runs DIRECTLY COUNTER to economically sound moves to restore a normal balanced economic life, under which the unemployed could once again become SELF-SUPPORTING.

The proposed amendment would make public made-work competitive with normal employment, and would render difficult, if not impossible, the demobilization of the depression army of the unemployed.

It would thwart sensible efforts to foster industry, commerce and agriculture, so that they could expand normal employment and thus relieve government of the credit destroying obligations en-

ITALY

Mobilizes for AFRICAN CLASH

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press

Rome, Feb. 11—Premier Mussolini today mobilized 250,000 soldiers, called out three classes of Italian sea fighters, and ordered a fleet of 50 airplanes into Eritrea as a new clash of Italian soldiers and Ethiopian warriors was reported on the border of Italy's African territory.

The air fleet, which has been under the command of Gen. Italo Balbo, the leader of the mass flight to Chicago two years ago, took off from Cyrenaica for Eritrea.

The three marine classes have been called to assist in the transportation of troops to Eritrea and Italian Somaliland.

By International News Service

London, Feb. 11—The new crisis between Italy and Abyssinia was regarded as a threat of war by the London press today.

The Evening Star's headline read: "War Threatened by Italy," while the Evening Standard labelled Italy's troop mobilization as a "war move."

SCORE

Hurt in School BLAST

By Associated Press

Biddeford, Me., Feb. 11—An explosion today damaged the St. Andre's Parochial School here while 1200 pupils attended classes.

More than a score of children were injured and several taken to hospitals.

Some pupils were reported overcome by gas fumes. The majority filed out of the building by fire drill.

LEONARD to Go, Says CURLEY

WEDNESDAY SET FOR OUSTER

Police Commissioner Joseph J. Leonard will be removed from office Wednesday.

Governor Curley said so today in the wake of a defi from Commissioner Leonard on the governor's "suggestion" that the police head resign.

The governor charged at the same time that the commissioner "said an outrageous insult and deflection" on the more than 2500 members of the police department by announcing the formation of "incorruptibles" to clean out the vice-rampant South End.

In the latest move that opened a wide breach between state and city crime forces—murder of Joseph P. "Red" Sweeney at the Cosmos Club—Governor Curley predicted the removal of Leonard at the meeting of the Governor's Council Wednesday.

"Should Resign"

After he learned of the police commissioner's defi, the governor said:

"Well, it would still seem to me that his proper course would be to resign. If he doesn't, we'll have to follow customary procedure and enlist the aid of the members of the council Wednes-

OFFICER FINDS

Wife Dead in Home

Manning lives at 126 Beaumont street, Dorchester.

He summoned Dr. Edwin C. Messer of 1709 Dorchester avenue. The physician pronounced the woman dead, apparently from heart disease. She was 33.

Kidnaped? No, Just "Out"!

MARY McELROY

McELROY

Girl Safe, FLED IN WORRY

By Associated Press

Normal, Ill., Feb. 11—Mary McElroy, daughter of City Manager H. F. McElroy of Kansas City, was taken from a Chicago bus here today for questioning by police after her sudden disappearance from her Kansas City home last night.

Miss McElroy was traveling alone. The 26-year-old brunette, victim of a sensational kidnaping in May of 1933, readily admitted her identity.

It was nervousness over the penalties meted out to three of the men convicted of her abduction which caused her to leave her father's home, she said.

One of the three, Walter L. McGee, is under sentence of death for the $30,000 kidnaping. A second, George L. McGee, drew a life sentence.

Appearing tired and worn, the young woman told police that she had not eaten since she left her home.

Her disappearance—she left home after telling her father she was going downstairs to play the radio—at first caused fear she had been kidnaped again.

Normal police notified Kansas City authorities they would hold Miss McElroy until the arrival of her father. The girl said:

"I was worrying so much about the case I must have lost my head."

62 Deer Slain; Nantucket Folk Hide

By Associated Press

Nantucket, Feb. 11—Nantucket deer, grown tame from being unmolested for years, fell easy prey to hunters from the mainland today as the state department of conservation ordered an open season on them.

Thirty-two gunners came to the island yesterday and as many more were expected today. At daybreak the season was on, and by 10:30 a. m. 62 deer had been slain.

The islanders, who are not gunners, found it prudent to stay at home.

Nantucket's deer herd long has been an attraction for summer visitors. In recent years, however, there have been claims for deer damage which the state had to pay. This resulted in the decision to make an open season.

The first deer was brought to the island by fishing boat in 1902, after it had been found swimming off shore. Two doe were purchased in 1926 by Breckenridge Long, now ambassador to Rome. It was estimated the herd had increased to between 300 and 400.

Casey Pushes Project

Washington, Feb. 11 (AP)—Representative Casey (D., Mass.), said today he would seek approval of a project for elimination of the Mechanic street grade crossing in Gardner, Mass., when the administration's $800 million dollar relief measure is enacted.

ADELA ROGERS ST. JOHN says Reilly the "master," has the "gift of tongues."

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—The final defense plea for Bruno Richard Hauptmann today turned into utterance of charges against Betty Gow and the dead Ollie Whateley and denunciation of the aged Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon.

"Condon stands behind something in this case that is unholy," Edward J. Reilly, chief of the defense, told the jury trying Hauptmann for his life as the kidnaper and murderer of baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

Dr. Condon was the ransom intermediary for Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, father of the slain child. He testified he paid $50,000 to Hauptmann in a Bronx graveyard.

Reilly declared a gang kidnaped the baby with the aid of "disloyal servants," and in this connection he named the nurse-maid, Miss Gow, and Whateley, the late Lindbergh butler.

He also brought in the name of "Red" Johnson, the Norwegian sailor friend of Miss Gow. Because Dr. Condon had said he believed "Red" Johnson was innocent, Reilly asked:

"Why should Condon come to the rescue of the only person in the world that they haven't brought back here if he didn't know him?"

Pleading to save Hauptmann from the electric chair as the perpetrator of the crime, Reilly declared:

"Colonel Lindbergh was stabbed in the back by those who worked for him."

In this connection he flung out the name of Betty Gow, and charged she was the only person, aside from the Lindberghs, who knew the baby was to be in Hopewell on the night of the crime; and of Whateley, the butler, now dead, who he said had charge of the dog which failed to bark when the baby was taken.

The booming attorney charged the kidnap ladder was a "plant" and that the baby was not taken from the nursery through the window.

Surrounded by nearly 100 mute exhibits and heard by the gray-faced, worried defendant, Hauck told the jury:

"The State of New Jersey contends that they have proven not only beyond a reasonable doubt, but conclusively and overwhelmingly that Bruno Richard Hauptmann is guilty of murder in the first degree, that he is guilty of the murder of the infant, Charles A Lindbergh, Jr."

Reilly told the jurors that "de-

FRIGID WAVE

Coming Again

A drop in temperature by tonight of probably 15 degrees is predicted by the weather man.

Although it will be colder and partly overcast, it won't be as cold as on February 1, 1899, when the temperature hit 4 below zero, the coldest February 11 in Boston's weather bureau history. A year ago today it was 15 above.

Protest on Bridge

A committee of 100 Chelsea business men and residents will be present at tonight's meeting of the Chelsea board of aldermen to protest the closing of pedestrian traffic on the Charlestown-Chelsea bridge, to permit work on it.

REILLY PUTS BIBLE TEXT UP TO JURY

spite the position and the prestige and the wealth of the distinguished family who find themselves in the position here of being bereaved, the state must prove its case according to law and not guess work or not inference, not maybes and not speeches."

Reilly attacked the pattern of the state's case.

"This is the crime of the century and it is the worst crime and the lowest type of crime ever committed to my knowledge," the defense attorney said, "but it is not the defendant who is guilty of it."

He mildly ridiculed the state's technical evidence.

"This case has come down now," he said, "in my opinion, to this, common, ordinary horse sense, and against that we are confronted with a lot of technicians and experts who at so much a day give us their opinion of things."

Reilly told the jury he respected Colonel Lindbergh, that he marched in the parade of welcome when the colonel returned from his fame-making flight to Paris, but he added:

"Bruno Richard Hauptmann was never on those grounds."

He referred to the Lindbergh estate at Hopewell, N. J., from which the baby was stolen.

Ridicules Master Mind

"Now," Reilly said, "they would have you in one breath believe that this man Hauptmann was a master mind, that he planned this himself, and the next minute they would have you believe that he was the worst fool in the world, that he was dumb, that he didn't know anything; he would wear gloves making a ladder so his fingerprints wouldn't be left behind; and he would sit an hour and a half talking to Condon with his face exposed. In one the careful master mind, in the other the perfect fool. Now you cannot carry water on both shoulders."

Later, he said:

"As we go through it you will see that this case has been pieced together as you would write a scenario, but it is not founded on honest fact.

"The first thing you have got to decide when you go into your jury room is this, how in God's name did Hauptmann know anything about the Lindbergh home.

"I don't care about handwriting. I don't care anything about wood, nor do I care about the ransom money for which this man stands indicted in the Bronx and for which he has to stand trial there.

"Nor am I going to allow you to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for Bronx County and say 'Well, because he had the money he must be guilty of something, therefore we will send him away for something'."

Stabbed by His Servants

"Colonel Lindbergh was stabbed in the back by the disloyalty of those who worked for him and despite the fact that he courageously believed that there was no disloyalty in the servants' quarters. I say now that no one could get into that house unless the information was supplied by those who worked for Colonel Lindbergh."

"Colonel Lindbergh may have all the confidence in Betty Gow, he pleases in Betty Gow," the defense attorney declared, "I have none.

"How do we know who Betty Gow talked to when she got the message Tuesday afternoon from Mrs. Lindbergh, 'Come over, the baby is not well'? But she never communicated with Hauptmann, so that I say nobody in God's world knew that baby was going to be there Tuesday night but this Gow girl."

He referred to the Lindbergh dog.

"Who controlled that dog's movements that night?" he asked and answered himself: "The butler."

"I don't care what sound, the sound of the wind or anything else, inherently and instinctively these dogs can smell a stranger on the grounds and that dog never even barked.

"I say the circumstances point absolutely along a straight line of guilt toward that butler and the servants who were disloyal to Colonel Lindbergh.

"This nurse (Betty Gow) who went on the stand and blandly told you she loved that wonderful little baby allowed herself to stay away from the baby from before 8 o'clock until 10 o'clock at night. Do you believe that? Well, if she did, it was part of the disloyal plan by which that baby was taken out of that house."

"The person that picked that child out of that crib," he cried, "I give you my solemn word, the inference I draw, knew that child and that child knew that person."

Quotes Text as He Begins

Reilly's summation began after Prosecutor Hauck had used an hour to declare the contention it had proved "not only beyond a reasonable doubt, but conclusively and overwhelmingly" that Hauptmann was guilty of the crime.

After Hauck had finished his address and a short recess had been taken, Reilly walked slowly to the round table in front of the jury rail.

His voice was low and confidential as he began his summation.

"I approach this task with a feeling of the gravest responsibility," he said.

"I know that there is a distinguished family involved in this case," he said, "but the case must be decided on the evidence."

"Judge not," he quoted from St. Matthew, "lest ye be judged."

"It's the pattern by which you must go," he observed.

The indictment, he asserted, said that on March 1, 1932, "at no other time," in East Amwell township, Hunterdon County, the "young Lindbergh baby" was killed.

The State's case to support a conviction must have shown, he pointed out, that the baby died instantly.

"In this case," he said, "it is very apparent that since the defendant was arrested, the burden of proving his innocence shifted to him.

Crime of the Century

"This is the crime of the century.

"You'll have that howled into your ears by the gentlemen who will reply to my words.

"There is no doubt it was the crime of the century. I'm not here to fool you.

"This is the crime of the century," he went on, "the worst crime, the lowest crime that the books hold. But the defendant is not guilty."

Reilly said he admired and sympathized with Colonel Lindbergh and his family. He said he was impressed with the Colonel's transatlantic flight.

"But," he shouted, "we cannot be swept off our feet when there is no evidence."

"Bruno Richard Hauptmann never drove a nail in that ladder," Reilly said. "He never stopped near Princeton airport. He never went on that estate."

"They would have you believe," Reilly went on, "that Hauptmann was a master mind, in one breath, and, in the next, that he was the worst fool in the world.

"They want you to believe he wore gloves when making the ladder and then sat for a hour and a half talking to Dr. Condon with his face exposed."

Calls Witness "Shifty-Eyed"

Reilly mentioned Charles B. Rossiter, the man who said he saw Hauptmann near the Princeton airport the Saturday before the kidnaping.

"Shifty-eyed," Reilly snapped, as he spoke of Rossiter on the stand. "He left this court without me knowing him, without you knowing him."

He said Rossiter was a typical character for "this wonderful scenario."

"This wonderful scenario," he repeated loudly, "but it's not founded on honest facts."

"I don't believe Rossiter, any more than I believe Whited, because Hauptmann was never near Hopewell."

"Colonel Lindbergh was stabbed in the back by those who worked for him," Reilly declared.

"No one could get into that house unless someone inside aided.

"It's in the evidence that the family was staying over for the first time on a Tuesday night.

No One Knew but Betty Gow

"No one outside the household knew that."

"No one but Colonel Lindbergh, his family, the Morrow household, the nurse, Betty Gow, the Morrow servants, and 'Red' Johnson knew that."

Betty Gow knew that the Lindberghs were staying a night longer, he said.

"Colonel Lindbergh," he added, "can have all the confidence in the world in Betty Gow.

"I have none. She came from Scotland when they gave her $700. Otherwise she wouldn't have come."

"I saw this to you: Nobody in God's world knew that baby was going to be there that Tuesday night, except the Gow girl," he shouted.

"There was one agency in that house that would respond only to its master, and that was the fox terrier," Reilly said.

"Who controlled the dog's movements that night—the butler! A dog which could smell any stranger who stepped on the grounds."

Reilly declared he didn't know much about these people—the servants—but said there was evidence pointing to "their guilt."

Betty Gow, he declared, said she "loved this little baby" but, while it was ill she remained away from it that night from 8 o'clock until 10.

Must Put Bruno in the Nursery

"Keep before you these particular important bits of evidence before you consider the other matters that have been dragged into the case, the handwriting, the fingerprints, the board.

"You've got to place Hauptmann in that nursery," he thundered, smacking the table with his fist.

"The state says he was in that room. Let's see if he was."

He then launched into a study of the nursery on the kidnap night, recalling how Betty Gow and Mrs. Lindbergh went around closing the windows and shutters.

"Hauptmann," he asserted, "would have had to know a great deal about the house to have committed the crime.

"Hauptmann is not going to be drawn to his death through the squares of Flemington because you are influenced by the prominence of people in the case."

Declares Baby Knew Kidnaper

"This is a scenario they have written," he charged once more, "but it doesn't ring true to common sense."

He turned then to the kidnap ladder, and told the jurors the state expected them to believe that the ladder was placed against the wall, its topmost rung reaching a point about 30 inches below the nursery window sill.

"The person who picked that child," Reilly declared in loud and emphatic tone, "out of its crib knew the child and the child knew that person."

He went on:

"He goes back with a 30-pound child in his arms, swings himself out of the window in the darkness, and is able to find the top of that rickety old ladder, three feet below the window.

"They'd have you believe he climbed down to the dowel pin and the dowel pin broke. That's what they say, but what they say is not evidence."

Reilly picked up a photograph of the ground beneath the window showing the ladder holes.

"That ladder was a plant," he asserted. "No one climbed that ladder. When it fell, if it did, it would have dug up mounds of earth beside those holes. Do you see any mounds?"

He showed the photograph to the jury, and said the holes were undisturbed.

There was nothing else to show a man had fallen, he argued.

"I say that points out very strongly that no one went up that ladder," Reilly went on. "Only one foot print. They would have you believe that the kidnaper walked through the night to the house, as the sailors say, by dead reckoning. But they found no footprints but that one.

"I say the ladder was a plant, I say it was never up against the house that night." Again the fist pounded the table.

Reilly stalked over to the kidnap ladder, he took it up and smashed it against the wall with a resounding bang.

The state wanted the jury to believe, he went on, that the man and the baby fell but left no impressions in the mud.

Failed to Bring Johnson Back

"A telephone call came for Betty Gow," Reilly asserted, "from Red Johnson that night only two hours after she had left him to go to Hopewell."

He poked his finger at Mrs. Stockton, juror No. 5.

"What do you know about 'Red' Johnson?

"What do I know about 'Red' Johnson?

"The State of New Jersey spent thousands of dollars, your money, to bring the Fischs to this country for the trial, and only put one of them on the stand.

"Who's hiding things here?" demanded.

"Who's hiding the truth?"

Reilly swung back to what he said was a signal from the Lindbergh house on the kidnap night.

"They got the signal: 'The coast is clear.'

"Then that child came down one of those two stairways in the arms of some person the little child had confidence in and trusted.

"That's why the baby did not cry out or scream.

Must Place Him in That Room

"That's the first point you've got to hurdle. You've got to place Hauptmann in that room," he said.

He said the state's "theory" was that the skull fracture occurred in the fall from the ladder.

Theories, he asserted, were not enough. "Direct evidence" was necessary.

Reilly asserted the child might have lived several days in any one of 100 hiding places near Hopewell.

Reilly emphasized again that nothing was disturbed in the nursery, and then spoke of the mud prints found on the nursery floor.

"They say there were mud prints on the floor, but it's just as consistent those prints came off Colonel Lindbergh's shoes as off anybody else."

Reilly said he believed the colonel got mud on his shoes when he dashed out to search for his child, and then left the mud on the nursery floor when he returned after the futile hunt.

The defense attorney questioned the plausibility of a kidnaper stepping on a suitcase under the window and not breaking it.

"That baby was taken down those stairs," he declared again, indicating the diagram of the house floor plan.

Hits Bungling of State Police

"And Colonel Schwarzkopf, the head of the state police, is a graduate of the nation's great military school."

He had scorn in his voice when he mentioned Betty Gow.

"I can't imagine any prayers coming from that woman that night, the woman who contacted the man (Red Johnson) from Denmark."

He gestured toward the jury foreman.

"I don't know what the motive—greed, gain, spite, or vengeance.

"But, my God, it could not be planned by one man. It had to be the work of a gang," he shouted.

"The state stands here and says, 'Kill Hauptmann'; let everybody else sink into obscurity," Reilly shouted, "and close the case."

"The mob demands 'Kill the German carpenter' on circumstantial evidence."

"Now if you want to convict Hauptmann as the mob wants you to, all my prayers and pleas won't help him. However, I think you value your oath as jurors more highly than that."

tailed in carrying economic casualties on public payrolls.

To his credit, President Roosevelt formulated a plan to emphasize the temporary, relief character of public jobs, which could be tapered off as rapidly as healthy expansions of ordinary business took place.

In his message to Congress, Mr. Roosevelt specifically said:

"Compensation on emergency public projects should be in the form of security payments which should be larger than the amount now received as a relief dole, but at the same time not so large as to encourage the rejection of opportunities for private employment or the leaving of private employment to engage in governmental work."

IN REJECTING THIS INTELLIGENT RECOMMENDATION, THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE HAS CONVERTED A SOUND PROPOSITION INTO A PORK BARREL ABUSE.

In effect, the amendment would TAX INDUSTRY to give government the funds with which TO DIVERT MEN FROM NORMAL EMPLOYMENT.

It would in effect make the depression chronic, and would remove incentive of men to get off relief rolls and back to business payrolls.

By thus making budgetary deficits permanent, instead of temporary, it would continue to increase the national debt and in time destroy the national credit.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT SHOULD STICK BY HIS GUNS.

MURDER PROVED, HAUCK ASSERTS

Beyond All Doubt

OVERWHELMING EVIDENCE POINTS TO BRUNO, HE INSISTS

By Associated Press

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—The following is Anthony M. Hauck Jr.'s summation of the State of New Jersey's case against Bruno Richard Hauptmann on the charge of slaying Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

"The State of New Jersey contends that it has proven conclusively that Bruno Richard Hauptmann killed the Lindbergh baby and is guilty of murder in the first degree," Hauck said with emphasis.

In a crime of murder, he went on, a corpus delicti must be proved.

The corpus delicti was the child that on the afternoon of March 1, 1932, Hauck went on, was "a normal child; it ate, slept and played as do my children."

Hauck traced the events in the Lindbergh household the night of March 1, 1932, before the kidnaping, as Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh and Betty Gow had described them. He said:

"The baby was pinned in its crib just as my children have been. We have shown you that that baby was murdered.

"We have further shown that that baby was forcibly taken from its crib."

Speaking in level tones, Hauck again referred to testimony of the Lindbergh household. He told how the baby's nurse, Betty Gow, had gone to the nursery the night of the kidnaping to tuck the baby in and look at it for the last time.

"You remember," the prosecutor continued, "how Betty Gow told you how, when she reached into the crib, The baby was gone'?

"You remember how she told how Colonel Lindbergh cried out, 'Anne, they've stolen our baby!'"

Fall Caused Baby's Death

Hauck talked in a loud conversational tone, except for the brief dramatic spots in his review. Then his voice rose to a shout.

Continuing, Hauck declared:

"Then on May 12, the body of the baby was found. There is no dispute on the fact that the baby was Colonel Lindbergh's.

"Counsel for the defense has stated 'We do not dispute the fact that it was the Lindbergh child!'

"It is sufficient that Colonel Lindbergh stated in court that it was his child.

"The cause of death was a fractured skull. And we have proved that the child was killed by a fall that ladder.

"We experimented—and found that the ladder broke in the same way it did when Bruno Richard Hauptmann carried the baby down the ladder. That fall caused the baby's death."

Hauck contended the state has proved Hauptmann committed a burglary in entering the baby's nursery that night. He cited the ladder, the ladder marks beneath the window, the footprints in the nursery.

"We have shown intent to commit a battery by the way he jerked that baby from the crib," said Hauck.

"We have proved intent to steal by the way he left the ransom note in the window and yanked the sleeping suit from the baby's body—the sleeping suit which he later used to collect $50,000 of Colonel Lindbergh's money.

"This defendant returned that baby's garment and received $50,000 of Colonel Lindbergh's money.

"We have proved that the child died as a result of failing from that ladder; we have proved that death ensued immediately.

"If the baby died elsewhere, it would not have been buried so near the Lindbergh home.

"Our contention is that Charles A. Lindbergh was murdered in an attempted burglary.

"The baby was in his bed, pinned there. The windows were shut. There were footprints found, showing that there was breaking and entering.

"We say that the defendant committed battery when he seized the infant, Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., from his crib and he stole when he tore the sleeping garment from the baby.

Hauptmann winced slightly when Hauck turned, pointed at him and declared:

Crime Planned for Long Time

"That man sitting in that chair —Bruno Richard Hauptmann—planned this crime for a long time. The original ransom note said:

"'This is planned for a year already,' or words to that effect."

"We showed that this defendant watched the Lindbergh home," declared Hauck. "Millard Whited came here and testified he saw him before the crime. He described that very man the day after the crime.

"Mr. Koehler told you in the most wonderful testimony I ever heard of how he went from mill to mill long before Hauptmann was arrested.

"We traced the lumber to the neighborhood of the defendant. We showed Hauptmann not only worked in the Bronx lumber yard but purchased lumber there, and the same type lumber was found in the yard.

Evidence Shouts "Hauptmann"

Hauck reminded the jury the State has introduced 308 exhibits to pin the crime on Hauptmann.

He told how, through wood and plane marks, chisel marks and nail holes, the government expert had traced the kidnap ladder to Hauptmann.

"But there is more evidence that shouts 'Hauptmann! Hauptmann!' in this case," continued Hauck.

"Look at the ransom notes. We showed you by the experts, and the notes themselves, that the writing, the symbols, the spelling, and the size of the words themselves that the writer of these notes was Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

"They showed you the spelling of the word 'bond.' They showed you the uncrossed 't's,' the undotted 'i's,' the peculiar lines.

"One of the experts took letters from the ransom notes and spelled out the name 'Bruno Richard Hauptmann' so that it was his own signature. That is evidence that shouts 'Hauptmann.'

"But there is more evidence which shouts to the entire world, 'Hauptmann, Hauptmann, Hauptmann,'" cried Hauck. "There is the same little punch holes in each ransom note, in the symbols.

"We showed that one note referred to the others, like a history. From the first to the last when the $50,000 was paid, we have shown you conclusively that the writer of every note was Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

Identified Bruno by His Eyes

"We have Hochmuth, the old man who on March 1, 1932, while standing on the porch, saw a car drive past and almost ditch itself and stop.

"There was a ladder in the car and the man's face grew red but those eyes, that's what he remembered. And he identified Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the man."

Hauck cited the hoard from Hauptmann's closet with the telephone number of Dr. Condon written on it.

He mentioned the baby's sleeping suit, and with one of the ransom notes, as another link between Hauptmann and the actual murder.

"We have heard Dr. Condon, the man who was willing to give his time, his money, his very life, to help in the case," said Hauck.

"He testified Bruno Richard Hauptmann jumped off the cemetery wall the night he paid the $50,000 ransom.

"He spent an hour and 20 minutes next to him on the bench. And Bruno Richard Hauptmann got the $50,000 of ransom money."

Voice Identified by Lindbergh

Hauck called the jury's attention to the testimony Colonel Lindbergh gave.

"Colonel Lindbergh testified that on the night of April 2, 1932, he sat in his car near the cemetery and heard a voice call, 'hey, doktor!' Hauck said. "The same voice Lindbergh heard in the cemetery was the voice of Hauptmann.

"And you've heard that voice here—and you'll never forget it.

"I want you to remember this —the same man who got the $50,000 ransom had approximately $15,000 of it hidden in his garage. It was hidden there in a can and in the walls. There is conclusive evidence of all this."

Then Hauck told the jury to remember the positive identification of Hauptmann by Condon, the identification of Hauptmann's voice by Lindbergh.

"Would you ever forget that voice?" Hauck demanded.

Hauck concluded his summation at 10:56 a. m. He had talked for forty-eight minutes.

PRETTIEST JUROR GIVES BRUNO HOPE

By DOROTHY ROE
Universal Service Staff Correspondent

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—Pert, pretty Mrs. Ethel Stockton may be the deciding factor in the verdict of the Hauptmann jury.

Mrs. Stockton, youngest and most attractive of the four women among the jurors who are to deliberate on life or death for the German carpenter, kindled hope in the heart of Bruno Hauptmann when she flashed him a smile at the conclusion of his testimony 10 days ago.

Bruno is counting on that smile, which startled a packed courtroom. And spectators who have watched the courtroom drama through the long weeks of testimony are wondering if feminine sympathy may save the life of the man accused as kidnaper of the Lindbergh baby.

There are those who argue that all the legal logic in the world cannot combat the impulsive sympathy of a woman.

But there are those who, knowing Mrs. Stockman, say that her judgment could not be swayed by an impulse.

Slim, vivacious, alert, Mrs. Stockton is 30, and the mother of a seven-year-old son.

She knows the workings of the law, because for six years she was secretary to the former district-attorney of the county, Johnson H. Allers.

She is described as an efficient, intelligent young woman, trained in the preparation of legal briefs for murder cases.

When she was chosen as a juror, she could not resist a triumphant smile at her young farmer husband, who was rejected.

FOODLESS BOY Continues to Live

Granite City, Ill., Feb. 11 (INS)—Displaying astounding vitality, 14 day-old Robert Jenkins, unable to take nourishment since birth because of a stricture of esophagus continued to cling to life today.

Bernard Jenkins, the infant's father, was told by physicians that the child may live another week, although little hope is held out for recovery.

HOOVER In New York

New York, Feb. 11 (INS)—Herbert Hoover of Palo Alto, Cal., private citizen, was an unobtrusive visitor in New York today.

Arriving here without his wife on the 36th anniversary of his marriage, the former President was amiable in the extreme to reporters and photographers, but declined contact with such a situation before, and (it's given me a new slant on human nature.

"Naturally I became somewhat attached to him. There's something sort of likeable about the fellow. He isn't all bad——

"For example, he is very clean. He likes to take baths, and stands under the shower for half an hour.

"I feel sorry for the man," Low continued. "He's in such a rotten jam. It depressed me when the evidence against him seemed so damaging. I felt as if I were walking the last mile with him."

"He feels badly for his wife and child," said the deputy. "That's the hole in his armor.

"At first he was cold and stoical, and gave no outward signs of feeling. As the trial date approached, he showed signs of nerves, and later, in the first days of the trial, seemed to enjoy the limelight.

"He spent time combing his hair and straightening his clothing before he entered court. Then he became annoyed about it all.

GUILT Depends on FLIGHT, LAW JOURNAL POINTS OUT

By Associated Press

New York, Feb. 11—The importance of the time element in the death of the Lindbergh baby is pointed out in an editorial in today's New York Law Journal which discusses felony murder, under which Bruno Richard Hauptmann is being tried.

Without specifically naming Hauptmann, the editorial asserts:

"Should the evidence show that a defendant charged with felony murder, when attempting to kidnap an infant, committed the crime of burglary in breaking and entering the home when the child, with its clothing, was carried away, it would nevertheless be essential that the evidence should show, with all the certainty required for the conviction of a crime, that the death of the infant occurred, or that the fatal injury was inflicted, before the completion of the crime of burglary.

"Lacking adequate proof of this essential element, the prosecution would fail."

The editorial also gives the opinion that the Hauptmann jury must bring in either a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, a verdict of acquittal or must disagree.

Under the law, the editorial says, a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree cannot be brought in because the courts have held that the commission of a felony constitutes a form of premeditation, the basis of murder in first degree.

Killed in Flight

The New York Times, in a dispatch from Flemington, quotes Attorney General David T. Wilentz of New Jersey as saying:

"This baby was killed during the flight from the kidnaping and, in my opinion, the flight is part of the uncompleted crime."

Former Judge George K. Large, special counsel to the prosecution, gives the same opinion.

"This was a burglary," Large is quoted as saying. "This burglary was not completed, in my opinion, until every element was completed. It was still going on while the burglar-kidnaper was escaping—all the time he was in flight from the scene of the crime."

The Times said Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel, in his opinion the state made a great mistake in drawing up the indictment under which Hauptmann is being tried.

"You cannot measure this kind of thing with a tape measure," he said. "Whether the kidnaper was a block away or 10 feet away, he was away and another crime there was had been completed."

Robert Rosecrans, of defense counsel, said the defense does not believe the state had established that the crime of burglary had been committed.

Bruno 'Thinks Things Look Dark', Jailer Says

By Associated Press

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—Hovey Low, the special deputy who has spent more time with Bruno Hauptmann than any other guard, said today: "I believe he thinks things look very dark."

"For the first time, he asked me what I thought the outcome would be," Low said.

"I replied, 'Richard, that's in the lap of the gods.' He said, 'I am innocent,' and I answered, 'Don't worry.'"

Low said he had seen many changes in Hauptmann's demeanor. "In the two months I've been with him for six hours a day."

"He is more worried now than he ever has been before."

"Hauptmann is 'wrought up,' he said, "over what he feels is a rift between his attorneys. He thinks Lloyd Fisher wants to do things Reilly won't let him do."

Fisher is a Flemington attorney and Edward J. Reilly is chief of defense counsel.

"After all these weeks," Low said, "Hauptmann's still an enigma to me. There's a question in my mind whether he understands himself."

The deputy's eyes were grave behind his glasses.

"Watching Hauptmann hasn't been a pleasure," he said.

"It has been a unique experience," he said, "and I'll never forget it. I've never been in close

"Master Pleads for Man With Gift of Tongues"

By ADELA ROGERS ST. JOHNS

We know now why Edward J. Reilly has been rated a great criminal lawyer.

He has the gift of tongues, this Irishman, and he knows that there is only one tool of all great art—the tool of simplicity.

Up there on his feet, the big man from Brooklyn is speaking simply, almost gently, to the 12 jurors who hold the power of life or death over his client, Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

His voice is the voice of your neighbor, the voice of your friend, and it rises to hit a climax very, very seldom. Except when these crescendos blaze a moment across the courtroom, Reilly might be any man telling simply and definitely and with infinite care what he knows about the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby.

If he has made a mistake at all it is in talking down to his jury just a little bit. These men and women of Flemington may not quite like that, but it is a slight mistake and one that is soon over. They have listened for many weeks to the testimony, these jurors, they have heard the amazing array of conflicting facts and opposed statements, and Reilly is making it all very simple ad all very easy for them now as he talks.

He is explaining a lot of things, and he is going to the heart of those unexplained matters which will help to give his listeners a reasonable doubt as to Hauptmann's guilt.

He drives clearly and easily at the weak spots in the state's case. And he does it with simple words, he does it with definite appeal.

The jury listens carefully, but strangely enough they do not look at Reilly. They look past him, they look at the floor, but they are listening.

MRS. ENZO "Advised" to QUIT ITALY

By Associated Press

Naples, Feb. 11—Mrs. Madeleine Force Astor Dick Fiermonte was advised today by her attorney to leave Italy at once in order to avoid bigamy complications.

The former social registerite, who is the second wife of the Italian baron, said that the attorney had informed her that she might face a sentence of from one to five years for participating in bigamy, since Italy does not recognize divorce.

The attorney is Francesco Monteferdini, who has gone to Rome to investigate all the circumstances of the case.

Monteferdini told his client that Enzo Fiermonte had not registered his American divorce or his American marriage to his American wife with the Italian consulate in New York, and that consequently his passport has been withdrawn until the police have investigated the circumstances of his divorce from an Italian woman and his remarriage.

The attorney is making a report of the situation to Ambassador Breckinridge Long of the United States.

RUDY Ready to Wed AGAIN

LIFE WITH FAY WAS "HELL"

By International News Service

New York, Feb. 11—Rudy Vallee still thinks his true love is around the corner.

"My life with Fay Webb for a year and a half was one of unadulterated hell, misery and loneliness such as I never want to know again," the King of Crooners declared today.

"But I am willing to marry again when the right girl comes along."

Rudy was discussing the court action in which his estranged wife, Mrs. Fay Webb Vallee, seeks to set aside the agreement under which he pays her $100 a week alimony.

The trial will be continued next Wednesday.

"I am certain Fay never loved me at any time," said Rudy. "Anyway, she is completely out of my life."

Alice Faye 'Friend'

Is Alice Faye, the blonde crooner-ette, with whom Rudy has been seen a great deal, the "right girl"?

Rudy said that Alice was coming East but not on his account.

"She is simply a good friend," said Rudy. "She is coming from the coast only to attend the wedding of one of her closest friends, Betty King, who will be the bride of Walter Scharff, pianist in my orchestra."

Rudy declined to comment on whether he had any further pugilistic engagements.

The "poke" missed landing by an octave.

American had been kidnapped."

Colonel Lindbergh flushed at the appellation. During the attack on the state police, a smile was on Colonel Schwarzkopf's face.

Turning to the jurors, Reilly said he wanted to leave two thoughts with them as they went to lunch.

"There is no evidence in this case," he declared, "that Hauptmann was in the nursery that night, and there is no evidence whatsoever that the child was killed that night."

Justice Trenchard ordered adjournment at 12:25 p. m. until 1:45.

At the noon recess, Wilentz, commenting on Reilly's summation, said:

"Mr. Reilly is a delightful gentleman, but he hasn't begun to talk about the Lindbergh case yet."

"Guesswork Evidence"

Court reconvened at 1:48 p. m.

"It would be utterly impossible," Reilly began, "for any lawyer to repeat al the testimony taken in the period allotted to me for summation."

He said he would touch only the "highlights," but requested the jurors not to think he was omitting a discussion of various evidential points, "because I'm afraid of them."

Any such omissions, he declared, would not be because he wanted to, but because they were not highly important points.

He believed, he said, the attorney-general would make similar omissions when he addressed the jury tomorrow.

Reilly then began an analysis of the testimony of the state's handwriting experts.

"Experts' testimony, I believe his Honor will charge you, is nothing but opinion. You can disregard that and use common sense.

"I can't imagine what the bill will be for this procession of experts," he said.

Turning to the ransom note found in the nursery, Reilly spoke of the handwriting experts' testimony as "pretty slim evidence, guess-work evidence, to put a man in a nursery."

"Part of Their Scenario"

"Of course it is important to the state to pin the handwriting of the nursery note on Hauptmann," he went on.

"That's part of their scenario. And that's the only thing they have to put Hauptmann in the nursery, based on the opinion of experts."

Changing his line of attack again, Reilly spoke with incredulity of the possibility of a kidnaper taking the baby down the ladder.

"We ask you to consider whether Hauptmann, at night, put the baby on the window sill, stepped out on the ladder, put the note on the ledge, picked up the child on a breezy night, closed the window and the shutter and descended."

UNCORKS STUFFY NOSES IN 5 SECONDS

Doctors Recommending Extract Of Chinese Plant

When you have a head cold, thousands of tiny blood vessels in your nose swell up, choke off breathing and cork up your nostrils as tight as a bottle. You can't sleep well and it makes you feel miserable. But now—you can get relief in 5 seconds.

Thousands of years ago, Chinese medicine men discovered that one of their plants possessed almost magical powers in relieving nose and throat conditions. Today, after endless experiments, modern science has found a way to extract from this plant its most active ingredient, called Ephedrine. And, now, you and every other sufferer of head colds can get the wonderful benefits of Ephedrine in a scientific compound called Hill's Nose Drops.

In five seconds Hill's Nose Drops start to shrink swollen blood vessels in the nose. As they contract, passages open, mucus drains off and breathing is made easier. Now you understand why ordinary preparations that merely "oil" your nose cannot give the same relief. They don't hit at the real cause of clogged passages . . . nasal congestions. So, if you want "5 second relief" from head colds or the spasms of asthma or bronchitis, get a bottle of Hill's Nose Drops today. At all druggists. 30c.

Bruno Sees Acquittal As Verdict

Copyright, 1935, by International News Service

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—Bruno Richard Hauptmann believes he will be acquitted.

The man accused of kidnaping and murdering the Lindbergh baby made this statement to International News Service this afternoon just before court was reconvened and Edward J. Reilly, chief counsel for the defense, resumed his summation to the jury.

Hauptmann was escorted into the courtroom shortly before the afternoon session was reconvened. He was in a serious mood, but seemed quite hopeful.

"I think Mr. Reilly is making a wonderful address," Hauptmann said. "My conscience is clear. I think there can only be one verdict that will come out—acquittal.

"The jury are honest people. They will say 'Not Guilty.'"

"Do you think there is a possibility of a hung jury?" he was asked.

"No," he replied. "Only not guilty will be the verdict. Of that I am sure."

Hauptmann smiled as he talked. Suddenly he said:

"That's all I can say."

ROOSEVELT Scores on Relief WAGE SCALE

By International News Service

Washington, Feb. 11—President Roosevelt won a partial victory today when the Senate appropriations committee voted to reconsider its action of imposing "prevailing wage scales" on the $4,880,000,000 work-relief program.

Four Democratic Senators switched their votes to force reconsideration. A final vote on the wage scale, which the President opposes, was postponed until after the committee can hear Corrington Gill, assistant federal emergency relief administrator.

Gill advised the committee the cost of the work-relief program would be nearly doubled by payment of prevailing wages instead of a $50 monthly relief wage.

The four Democrats who switched from the prevailing wage rule were McAdo, California; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Russell, Georgia, and Truman, Missouri.

Senators Glass, McKellar, Hayden, Byrnes, Tydings, Coolidge and Bankhead, Democrats; Hale, Keyes and Norbeck, Republicans, voted with them to reconsider.

The committee also approved an amendment providing that no person can receive direct relief unless "in actual need" and "who has not within sixty days resigned from or left any position, the wage of which was at a rate in excess of $50 a month."

This would bar people resigning jobs in order to get on relief rolls.

Honolulu, Feb. 11—Rescue was virtually in sight today for the crew of the schooner Seth Parker, which was apparently out of disas Seth Parker, at 4:45 a. m. SOS of Sunday morning.

The British cruiser Australia, carrying the Duke of Gloucester, third son of King George of Great Britain, was expected to reach the adventure ship almost momentarily.

"Things are looking pretty favorable," said a message from the schooner's master, Philips H. Lord, American radio star, known as Seth Parker, at 4:45 a. m. (10:15 a. m., E.S.T.) today. "Some of the crew are getting a chance to sleep."

Sunday morning the Australia reached her in response to her first call, only to find everything in order, and was told assistance no longer was needed. The Australia radioed a report expressing "considerable astonishment" at the situation and went on its way, only to be turned back at 7:30 p. m. (1 a. m., Monday, E. S. T.) by the S O S message.

LOVE LETTERS OF NAPOLEON

ROMANCE GOES AWRY AS JOSEPHINE SCOLDS

Corsican Busy Conquering Prussia

By HENDRIK W. VAN LOON
Author of "The Story of Mankind," "The Story of the Bible," and Who has spent the last five years making an intimate study of the Napoleonic Period.

The little Tarcher girl from Martinique had now become the Empress Josephine.

She had a court of her own, gentlemen in waiting, ladies in waiting, pages, aides, chamberlains-in-ordinary, chamberlains-in-extraordinary, a financial genius with a high-sounding title to try and keep some sort of order in her finances, a special staff of servants, a special staff of cooks, a special staff of musicians and apothecaries.

She was getting a little older. When you are 41 and your husband is only 35, the difference is rather apt to tell.

But she still could hold her husband, only there was something not quite right between them.

He Was Still Infatuated

Napoleon knew that something was wrong, but he had not beaten around the bush in his interview with the imperial physician and he had learned that under no circumstances would his wife ever be able to have children.

Josephine's most unfortunate inability to provide the master of Europe with a son undoubtedly played a very important part in the events of the next seven years.

And in the battle of Jena the tradition of an invincible Prussia was completely destroyed.

'Sweet, Like You, Josephine'

It was upon this occasion that the famous encounter at Tilsit took place, in which Queen Louise of Prussia visited the tent of the man who had just destroyed her country and humbly begged for mercy. She got none.

Josephine heard of it and sent her husband a reproachful letter.

As you may see for yourself by reading the next rather abrupt epistle in one of which Napoleon tries to excuse his conduct by telling Josephine that he is not accustomed to the type of woman who meddles in politics.

GERA, Oct. 13, 1806—2 a. m.

I am at Gera today, my sweetheart; everything is going as well as I could have hoped for.

With the aid of God, in a few days things will take, I believe, a serious turn for the poor King of Prussia, whom I feel sorry for personally, because he is really a good sort.

The Queen is at Erfurt with the King. If she wishes to see a battle, she will have this cruel pleasure.

I go to sleep at 8 and get up at midnight. I am dreaming sometimes when you are not even yet asleep. All yours,

NAPOLEON.

POTSDAM, Nov. 1, 1806—2 a. m. Tallyrand arrives and tells me, darling, that you do nothing but cry.

Why? You have your daughter and your grandchildren and good news. That certainly ought to make you content and happy. The weather here is superb. Everything is going better.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE
Garbed as Emperor

Good-by, sweetheart, and my best to everybody.

'Only One Woman For Me—It's You'

Berlin, Nov. 6, 1806.

I received the letter in which you seem to be angry about my speaking badly of women. It is true I hate intriguing women more than anything. I am accustomed to women who are good, sweet and conciliatory; they are the kind I like.

If they have spoiled me it is not my fault but yours . . . You see, I like women who are both naive and sweet, but that is because they alone resemble you. Good-by, my darling.

NAPOLEON.

Nov. 17, 1806.

I have your letter. I am angry to see you sad. You have every reason to be gay.

Be content with the happiness of my love and all that you inspire in me. I will decide in a few days to call you here or send you to Paris. Good-by, my dearest.

NAPOLEON.

The other letters are mainly concerned with the new war that continued until the Peace of Tilsit in 1807.

They are, however, important for the gradual change in Napoleon's attitude toward his wife.

He is no longer Josephine's lover. He is no longer a private individual.

He is the Emperor of the French, and reasons of state may force him to take a step which he dreads to take.

POSEN, Dec. 2, 1806.

Today is the anniversary of Austerlitz. I have been in a ball in the city. I love you and want you. My troops are at Warsaw.

All these Polish women are like so many French women; but there is only one woman for me. Would you like to know who she is?

I will draw her portrait for you but I would have to make it very flattering for you to recognize yourself. These nights are long, all alone. All yours.

NAPOLEON.

Golimin, Dec. 29, 1808—5 a. m.

I can only write you a word, my darling; I am in an ugly barn. I have defeated the Russians, captured 30 cannon, their equipment and 6000 prisoners.

In two days, I'll be at Warsaw and will write you. All the best to you.

NAPOLEON.

His Cruelty to Louise Irks Empress

WARSAW, January 7, 1807.

My darling I am touched by all that you say; but the cold weather, the bad roads all prevent me from consenting to expose you to so many dangers and fatiguing efforts.

Better go back to Paris for the winter. Go to the Tuileries! Receive and carry on the same life you lead when I am there. It is my wish. It may not be long before I will rejoin you.

But it is absolutely necessary for you to give up the idea of traveling 300 leagues in this weather across enemy countries and in back of the army.

Believe me that it hurts me more than you to have to delay some days the happiness of seeing you again. Adieu, my sweetheart. Be gay and show your spirit.

NAPOLEON.

(Apparently, Josephine replied by accusing him of being contrary. Napoleon again warned her not to undertake the voyage, closing the letter, written from Warsaw on January 8, 1807, as follows:

"I am no more contrary than you. I would have loved to share the long Winter with you, but it is necessary to bow to circumstances. Adieu, my love.

"NAPOLEON."

WARSAW, Jan. 16, 1807.

My sweetheart, I have received your letter of Jan. 5, and all that you say of your grief annoys me.

Why tears and anguish? Have you no longer any courage? I will see you soon. Never doubt me or my love for you.

And if you wish me to cherish you even more dearly, show your strength of character. I am humiliated to think that my wife could be distrustful of my destiny.

Good-by, my darling, I love you. I want very much to see you, and am eager to know you are content and happy.

NAPOLEON.

WITTEMBERG, Feb. 2, 1807.

My darling, your letter of Jan. 28 grieves me; it is so sad. You tell me your happiness is your glory. That is not very generous.

You should say: the happiness of others is my glory; but that is not conjugal.

You should rather say: the happiness of my husband is my glory; yet, that is not maternal. It would be better to say: the happiness of my children is my glory.

Josephine, your heart is marvelous, but your reasoning is weak. Now, there!

That's enough quarreling. I want you to be gay, content with your lot and to obey not with grumbling, but happily.

NAPOLEON.

EYLAU, Feb. 14, 1807.

My dearest, I am still at Eylau. This country is covered with dead and wounded. It is not the most beautiful part of war.

You are probably worried, and that thought afflicts me. Please be calm, my darling, and amuse yourself. All yours,

NAPOLEON.

KILLED 'Red' for PUNCHES

FUGITIVE CLUB SLAYER KNOWN

Joseph P. "Red" Sweeney was shot to death at the Cosmos Club because he was winning a fist fight. Police know the killer. He has made a clean getaway.

These were the chief developments today on the night club killing that split wide open the state and city crime forces.

Captain Joseph McKinnon, who was assigned only a month ago to the crime-rampant South End district, dropped all other duties to gather evidence in support of a warrant for the fugitive.

That was the primary move behind the assignment by Police Commissioner Leonard of Captain James F. Daley, one-time supervisor of races and later commander of the West Roxbury division.

Two Appear

Commissioner Leonard made it plain today that Captain Daley was moved into the South End at the request of Captain McKinnon. The latter asked that another captain assume the station routine so that he could concentrate on a quick clean-up of the Sweeney murder.

Two employes of the Cosmos Club appeared before Captain McKinnon shortly after the change went into effect. He said they were asked to report only as witnesses for whatever evidence they might furnish in support of a warrant for the killer.

Funeral arrangements for Sweeney were not completed today. The body was delivered to James F. McGlinchey, Chelsea undertaker, on orders of Sweeney's wife, Mrs. Rita Sweeney, of 121 Gallivan boulevard, Dorchester.

Mrs. Sweeney, whose home has been closed since the murder, remained in seclusion.

Leonard to Go, Says Curley

day to get the requisite approval."

The police head had said:

"I have been informed that Governor Curley has asked for my resignation. I am not going to resign and, furthermore, have not thought of turning in my resignation on Wednesday or any other day. There is no good reason why I should do so.

"During the short period that I have been police commissioner, I have endeavored to administer the duties of my office fairly. To date I think I have done so. I have plans for many improvements and feel confident that I can go through with them.

"As a matter of fact, I have had no conversation with the Governor and know nothing officially relative to his request for my resignation."

In response to queries on the police head's plan to cleanup Boston conditions, the governor said:

"The statements accredited to the police commissioner, that a group of 'incorruptibles' has been formed in the police department rather suggests the old Biblical story of Sodom and Gomorrah (the story of cities destroyed by vice) and casts an outrageous insult and reflection on more than 2500 honest, capable, intelligent and efficient members of the police department, who are desirous of performing their full duty but who are hampered and hamstrung through fear on the part of their superiors that the course necessary might be politically inexpedient."

Up to Council

Leonard's defi makes it imperative that the governor take the issue to the council which recently fired two members of the Finance Commission after public hearings.

It was predicted that the task will not be so hard in Leonard's case. Governor Curley will have a solid Democratic vote. In addition several Republican members are reported as dissatisfied with the "deal" which gave Leonard his job in the dying days of the Ely administration.

In addition a report on conditions here is anticipated tomorrow from the secret crime commission appointed early in the Curley regime. It is said to be very revealing.

Leonard's first move, after a long conference, was the formation of a squad of "incorruptibles" whose job it will be clean up the city. They started work at 7:30 this morning.

Heading the group is Deputy Superintendent James McDevitt, a veteran officer, generally called in when there is a "mess" to be cleaned up. His chief aide is Lieutenant John A. Dorsey, reputedly "the best officer in the department."

UTILITIES Board Flayed by LEGISLATORS

The State Public Utilities Commission was under legislative fire today at a hearing before the committee on administration and finance on five bills, all providing for the election of the commission members.

The measures were taken under advisement without a single word in opposition.

Representative Lawrence P. McHugh of Roxbury charged that commission members last year lobbied in the General Court and were instrumental in defeating a similar proposal by a six-vote margin.

Representative Carl A. Weckel of Methuen charged the commissioners with an about-face in last year's Lawrence rate reduction. Rates were slashed $60,000, he said, and less than three weeks after the cut became effective, he charged, salaries were reduced to make up more than the $60,000.

Death Driver Jailed

Worcester, Feb. 11—Kenneth C. Angell, 24, of Dewey street, son of former Alderman Clayton Angell, was sentenced to eight months in the house of correction today after a jury found him guilty of negligent and drunken driving and leaving the scene of an accident, after his automobile killed Mrs. Mary F. Hoar, 52, of 23 Gates street on the night of January 12.

tives, in Congress and the White House.

The writer would be obliged if some learned student of Constitutional law would let him know if there is any mistake about this and what it is. The writer personally believes that there should be some way of regulating Congress, just now, in these hysterical times, especially. But the question is, not what did John Marshall think, but what did the Constitution-writers want?

Let those interested read the history of John Marshall, and admire his forceful character that increased his personal power until it rivalled that of the President.

Beginning in 1801, Chief Justice Marshall became practically the sole mouthpiece of the Supreme Court, and remained as such for 11 years, writing practically all important opinions which were John Marshall's opinions.

In Marbury V. Madison, Marshall decided, without constitutional authority for his decision, that it was the duty of the Supreme Court to disregard any act of Congress, and, therefore, any act of a legislature in one of the states, which the Supreme Court thought contrary to the federal Constitution.

In defiance of the opinions of Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence, John Marshall over-ruling Jefferson, decided that it was NOT contrary to the Constitution for a citizen to bring one of the states into a court of justice.

See also John Marshall's decisions in M'Culloch v. Maryland and Gibbons v. Ogden.

No one questions John Marshall's great judicial wisdom. He was a blessing to the country, strengthening, increasing, establishing the power of the federal government.

But did he change the Constitution, interpreting it in such a way as to take supreme power from the Constitution, Congress, and President, and give it to the Supreme Court?

Afternoon Snack Party Attracts Many

By BETTY ALDEN

TODAY WE BEGIN our little monologue by telling you about the "Afternoon of Divertissement" yesterday at which Miss Margaret Adams presented some of her original monologues . . . The entertainment was held at the Myles Standish Hotel by the board of directors of the New England Hospital for Women and Children and was followed by a "snack" in the Captain's Cabin, a very salty little grill room in a secluded corner of the hotel.

ELIZABETH EVERTS

Well rewarded were the men and women who forsook their cosy firesides and customary Sunday afternoon naps to attend the snack party. Miss Adams presented her humorous skits with a dramatic technique rare in one so youthful. Tall, slender and very blonde, she accented her fair coloring by wearing a black dress trimmed with emerald green. Miss Irene Ceresoli, was also heard in several soprano solos.

Faithful campaign workers whose every interest is devoted to the drive, were there to greet the guests . . . Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hausserman, the former the "speechmaker" of the afternoon, Mrs. John Gorham Palfrey, Mrs. H. Parker Whittington and Miss Margaret Curtis, all daily co-workers at headquarters, were encouraged to see so many friends interested in the scope of the work done by the hospital, as revealed in the short moving picture.

At Tea Tables

MRS. AUGUSTUS S. NYE, president of the board of directors of the organization, wearing a hyacinthe blue knitted dress, and Mrs. Robert M. Blackall, in a bright green crepe dress, were graciously and cordially welcoming the guests . . . among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Alanson Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. John P. Ilsley, Mrs. Allen Potter, Mr. Perry Thurber, Mrs. Philip Grabfield, and Mr. Thomas Campbell, all of Milton . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Markham Stackpole also enjoyed the entertainment and the friendly gathering around the tea table later, as did Miss Mabel Alexander, Mrs. David K. Horton, Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Lund, Jr., the latter one of the pourers, Mr. Harold Cutler, Miss Helen Jones, Dr. Sarah E. Palmer, Mrs. Rosamond Dean Snow, Mrs. James Pugh, Mrs. Leeds Burchard . . . The Misses Hersey and Mr. and Mrs. Royal G. Whiting . . .

As no snack is relished with complete pleasure unless served by one of the season's debutantes, Elizabeth Everts and Celia Durante were kept busy passing hors d'oeuvres and cups of coffee poured by Mrs. Robert G. Dodge . . . Although still a subdeb, Eleanor Blackall was initiated into this important duty of a debutante's life.

Gay Party of the Younger Set

IF YOU HAVE FOLLOWED the stories of who's who at the Barclay Club on Saturday evenings it will not be difficult for you to guess who escorted Jane Locke to that popular rendezvous the night before last . . . Jane was looking very radiant in powder blue silk as she practiced some of the latest dancing steps with HIM.

Anne Torbert, Louise Howe and Horace White all added gaiety to the Locke party. Bettina Eshleman flashed her dark eyes at Eliot Pierce who escorted her to a table for two, and Faith Chipman made a twosy with Frank Johnson.

The crowd was very gay . . . a large table of veteran Saturday nighters toasting Marie Barrie and her One and Only, Benton Cook, included Polly Cotter, Wallie Pierce, Don Fitzgerald and Nancy Nelson.

True to the college across the Charles, Katherine Brown was having a whirl in a crimson gown . . . Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Stone, Mr. and Mrs. George Proctor, 3d, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Chilton, were among the marrieds having just as much fun as the spinsters and bachelors.

Martha Endicott usually manages to steer her date toward the Barclay on Saturdays, and Polly Powers came in to tell her friends all about her recent trip to California.

Ruth Williams, in a floating dress of apple green, was one of THE lovelies along with Polly Paine and Louise McMillan who were with Henry Petri and Malcolm Bancroft.

Debutante Silhouettes

NUMBER ELEVEN

When Lucienne Boyer sang "Si Petite" she might well have been describing this dainty debutante and everyone who attended the debut in the Junior League Ballroom last November would agree.

She is a member of the Junior League and the Vincent Club and a graduate of Lee and Beaver Country Day.

LOVE DENIED

Sharlene Repulsed by Stuart

CHAPTER 25

Odd how the matter of money seemed to reverse their positions. Again he speculated about women through the ages—how each had waited, mute and patient, for the expression of her Lord's desire. If he were the Lord and Master here, would she have dared to lock her door against him?

The next day Sharlene was plunged into the "welcome home" whirl of telephone messages, notes, flowers, invitations and a stream of callers.

She pulled Stuart into the maelstrom, and all day he met new people and greeted those whom he had known casually. Between times, he and Mrs. Standring got his studio ready for work, and he telephoned an order for artists' supplies.

Sharlene's strange mood prevailed, lying under all the hectic excitement. And it persisted as the day passed. To Stuart, who did not have the key—that bulky air-mail letter—her actions were inexplicable. He had never seen Sharlene like this.

Mad Routine

She was on edge, though too well-bred to be downright disagreeable. She went through the mad routine of every day with a hard, brilliant kind of gayety, but invariably he was treated to the reaction—a silent and remote Sharlene. At times she seemed almost to hate him. As a result, he retired into his own shell and suffered.

He tried to work early mornings before the luncheons and teas, the dinners and parties, the golf and tennis, and polo and swimming caught them up and danced them about like leaves on the lawn. But he grew tired of his time pacing the big, bare studio, trying vainly to get an idea. All he could think of was Sharlene. It couldn't be altogether the Kent Damerell thing.

They understood each other about that. It was something new—something which was growing up between them. Since he believed now that her world looked on him as a "crooked stick," he began to be sure that Sharlene was thinking the same of him . . . and that explained her indifference.

It was a vicious circle. Unless he could work—and make money—he could never stack up in her mind with Kent Damerell, the successful. And getting stirred up like this all the time kept him from working—and making money.

When finally Abe Foreman brought up a substantial check and the picture for Sharlene, Stuart took them to her, along with his little notebook. Her door was open and she called to him as he hesitated outside. She was sitting at her desk, in a maze of letters and invitations, just finishing a telephone conservation:

"Yes, we're dying to see you . . . Tuesday week . . . That's fine . . . Goodbye." She jotted down a note in her engagement book and turned to Stuart, running her hand distractedly through her hair.

He lifted a huge basket of flowers aside from the desk, and propped the canvas there for her to see. She studied it a long time. She had always loved it for its tender beauty, but never understood it before. Now she knew its tragic fac- for Love Denied.

"Thank you, Stuart," she said at last, in a low voice, "I'd rather have this than all the other pictures put together."

"I Don't Want You"

He laid the check down before her. She looked at it perplexedly when she saw that it was endorsed over to her own account.

"Please take it," he begged.

"But I don't understand—" He handed her the little notebook and she saw the items: Small personal expenditures for himself on the trip and since. Flowers he had bought for her. Even the little old jewelled brass elephant they had found in a bazaar at Udaipur . . .

With a spasm of tears she closed the note-book. "What is it, Stuart?" she cried. "Do you hate me so—that you can't share my money?"

"No, no, Sharlene. I don't—hate you . . . Can't I make you see? It's because I must have—at least—your respect—"

"But I couldn't respect you more—if you had money. I respect you for being a very gallant gentleman—for putting up with me—for having a gorgeous talent. Why, Stuart, can't you see that I think more of you for being able to paint that picture—" and she flung her hand toward the lovely, unhappy figure on her desk, "than as if you had all the money in the world?"

He went over to stare out of the window a long while. She had not said the words he was hungering to hear when he had given her the chance. She said he had her respect. . . . He came back to her again: "Will you take the check, please, Sharlene?" Even though I know it's only the first installment of what I owe you, it will help me to beg things—" "Dear things? . . . What do you mean?"

"I mean—my position here, Charity—without love—"

"No, no, Stuart!" she protested, but her tone was not wholehearted.

"Do you want me to stay on here?" he asked abruptly.

She sprang to her feet, tumbling a lap-full of letters to the floor. "Stuart, you mustn't make any scandal—just as we've come home and everybody is wondering—you must stay by me! Promise!"

He shrugged wearily. "As you wish."

She put her hand on his arm beseechingly. "Stuart, I know I'm being a pig but stand by me bear with me a little while longer! I'll try to be—a decent wife . . ."

"Don't bother to try," he said harshly. I don't want you. I just want a chance to work."

He left the room. She was hurt by the cruelty of his last work, and yet she knew she deserved them.

Works on Canvas

Desperately Stuart started to work on a canvas, without an idea, without inspiration. The result was monstrous, wooden. He painted it out and began all over again, his confidence in his own ability badly shaken.

Mrs. Standring might have helped if she had stayed with them. But, she was so consumed with the fear of being considered a meddlesome mother-in-law, and spoiling everything in the delicate adjustment of these two creatures she loved so dearly, that she took herself off to New York, explaining that her sister needed her.

"Remember," she said on parting, "Stuart is to have fifty per cent of his time to work, Sharlene. You said yourself it was to be fifty-fifty."

The fifty per cent soon became a scant ten per cent and that not worth the trouble of going up to the studio to spend.

As the days and nights passed, Stuart never saw Sharlene alone, except when they drove together in the limousine to some social affair. Then she would ask him politely how the work progressed and he would invariably say: "Fine!"

Knits Take to Print

By Annice Brink

YES, actually a print in the sweater of this knitted suit. It is a tiny fleur de lis, and not difficult to do. The little-boy collar edged with fringe is original and flattering. Made in a light, fine yarn it will be the perfect thing in which to greet spring in the country, or to wear under a tweed top-coat in town when furs begin to hang heavily on your shoulders. Knitting directions include a simple, straight-line skirt. To receive directions, simply write to Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, Boston Evening American, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Josephine Culbertson

Difficult Defense Type

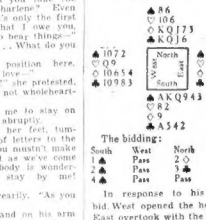
South, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2◇	2♡
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

In response to his partner's bid, West opened the heart Queen East overtook with the King, and then laid down the Jack, which also held the trick.

The West player stopped to take inventory. His only objective was to obtain the four tricks needed to defeat the opposing contract.

Two tricks in hearts had already been captured, and the Ace of diamonds figured to provide the third trick.

West correctly reasoned that the Ace of clubs was in the South hand and therefore the only possibility for the setting trick lay in the trump suit itself.

Two lines of play were open to East. He could lead his singleton club and if his partner had a high trump honor to get in on the first round, a ruff by East would provide the setting trick.

However, South eliminated this possibility as West needed the spade Ace for this plan to work, assuming declarer played the hand correctly. East discovered another hope.

If his partner had either three trumps to the ten or four to the nine, a third round of hearts would set up a trump trick even though declarer and dummy were void of the suit.

This play decided for the distribution which actually existed.

Had East not played the diamond Ace before leading the third heart, declarer would merely have discarded his lone diamond, thus conceding the trick to his opponents, but guaranteeing the contract.

East's precaution in cashing the diamond Ace first forestalled any such move by the declarer, and brought about the set of the contract.

LIQUID
Freshener
KEEPS STAR'S
Skin Soft

By Juliet Shelby

Somehow, during winter and summer, dry skin is most difficult to care for. Intense heat or cold affects it, and if it is not properly nourished and cleansed, it soon loses its smooth, transparent texture and so becomes a nuisance.

Bette Davis, captivating blonde movie star, has found she must cleanse her face with cream as well as with soap and water, and every night she uses a nourishing cream. Then she is faced with the problem of how to "freshen" her skin when she hops out of bed.

So she has finally decided that this this method is the most satisfactory. In the morning, she cleanses her skin with a cream—just as she does before patting on the night aid. Then she soaks absorbent cotton with a liquid freshener and gives her face a most thorough going-over.

She uses a linen towel to pat her face dry before she applies a little more of the liquid with her fingertips. When this has dried, she proceds with her makeup, which, incidentally, consists of no rouge, a light sprinkling of powder and vivid lipstick.

You might try this procedure if you have the same difficulty as Bette Davis. I can assure you that her complexion is very lovely, and her skin hasn't that "pasty" appearance which is so common among women who never use soap and water and insist on using only creams.

To obtain the name of the liquid Bette uses, phone Miss Shelby, Liberty 4000, or write to her at the Boston Evening American, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

PAT AWAY Frown LINES

Question: Although it may seem hardly possible I have a number of deep frown lines and I am only thirty. I am so afraid that they will become more pronounced as time goes on, and yet I don't know how to go about erasing them. Have you any thing to suggest?
Mrs. E. S. S., Brockton.

Answer: Premature wrinkles will make any heart sick. They usually appear on the sensitive, delicate skins which haven't as much substance as chiffon. The victims of wrinkles are nearly always thin and highly energized. Using a heavy massage cream freely patting it in lively every night. A muscle oil is also good. At least twice a day give the complexion an ice rub. To this formula add nine hours of refreshing sleep, and two hours of exercise every day in the open air.

MADGE'S PATER REPRIMANDS AVIS ARLEN

LILLIAN'S EYES arched upward in humorous unspoken comment as we heard her father sternly ask, "What are you doing here, Miss Arlen?" Then she gave her gamin grin.

"I can tell you, Chief, if she won't," she muttered beneath her breath. "She's watching her chance to see Hugh again, and I'll bet she has on a negligee that would make the Queen of Sheba go into a swoon of envy. The Arlen is a reckless dub in some things, and a most maddening hornet sting to everybody, but she knows her sartorial onions — boiled and fried."

ARTFUL AVIS

"Listen!" I said as Avis began a voluble explanation, and Lillian came close to me and stopped her running monolog.

"Why! I haven't been able to get to sleep," Avis said in the saccharine accents which she affects when she wishes to gain some particular purpose, "and I thought I would steal down to the library and read for a while. I wouldn't disturb mother down there. Then, just as I was getting into my robe, I heard a car, and looking out of the window I saw Hugh driving in so furiously that I was afraid something had happened, especially as I had seen Mr. Underwood drive out just as furiously a few minutes ago. I'm so afraid something has happened to Mr. Graham, aren't you?"

"Oh, Hush!" she said, as a door opened and closed below, "do tell me nothing has happened to Mr. Graham at the hospital! I'm frightened out of my wits."

"And few enough of those there are my lady," Lillian whispered caustically. "Look here!

Before I could prevent her, she had opened the door disclosing an interesting tableau in the upper hall. Coming up the stairs was Hugh Grantland, while leaning over the banister, attaired in floating figured chiffon of bright crimson, Avis Arlen held her hands out to him with a beseeching air. At the head of the stairs stood my father, with a coldly stern and disapproving air, to which I knew Avis was absolutely impervious.

"Over the banister leaned a face, tenderly sweet and beguiling." Lillian hummed the old tune under her breath, and despite my terror of the situation engendered by Lee Chow, I felt my lips twitching at her absurdity.

But Hugh patently had no time for frivolous distractions. He gave Avis but the briefest of glances, and answered her question with courteous but unmistakable indifferent brevity.

"Mr. Graham is perfectly all right. Nothing has happened which need frighten you in the least. Will you excuse me, please? How are things now, Chief? Harry gave me only the briefest account. Is—everything—all right."

I had a queer, intuition feeling that my name had been on Hugh's lips, and that he had substituted the innocuous "everybody" because of the presence of Avis.

ORDERED TO HER ROOM

"Yes, everybody except Lee Chow, who isn't very well."

"Oh, poor Mr. Lee!" Avis said with theatrically clasped hand, thrusting herself into the limelight again. "I am so sorry! Are you sure there is nothing I can do, Hugh?"

Her voice made a caress of his name, and I saw his head turn ever so slightly toward her. But there was reluctance, almost distaste, in the gesture, or so I fancied, and my father saved him the trouble of a reply.

"Yes, Miss Arlen, there is something you can do for us immediately. You can return to your room, lock your door and stay there until morning."

Guide to New Books

By Miles Alden

TABITHA OF LONELY HOUSE—Illustrated by W. M. Berger—Appleton-Century.

Subtitled "A Tale of Old Concord," this book seems intended primarily for girls of 12 or 13. It is the story of a 16-year-old girl in the days when Emerson and Louisa May Alcott walked the streets of historic Concord.

In fact both of these personages help to solve the mystery that has surrounded the aunt with whom Tabitha lives and help her get away from the cheerless and lonely house.

The Underground Railroad—the Abolitionists' device for aiding runaway slaves to escape to Canada—gets more than a little attention in the story.

Adults will find its characters a bit overdrawn, but children are sure to enjoy them. And then, there are the illustrations.

"LAST NIGHT HE PUT THE RING ON MY FINGER"

Romance comes to the girl who guards against COSMETIC SKIN

NO CHARM so thrilling—so sure to win—as soft, smooth skin! So don't let unattractive Cosmetic Skin destroy the loveliness men find so appealing!

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

Many a woman who thinks she removes cosmetics thoroughly is actually leaving bits of stale rouge and powder in the pores day after day. Then the pores become choked—tiny blemishes, dullness, blackheads, perhaps, warn of Cosmetic Skin.

Lux Toilet Soap (the soap 9 out of 10 screen stars use) is especially made to remove cosmetics thoroughly. Its ACTIVE lather sinks deep into the pores, removes every trace of dust, dirt, stale cosmetics. Use this gentle soap before you put on fresh make-up—ALWAYS before you go to bed. Keep your skin beautiful the Hollywood way!

BEATRICE FAIRFAX GIVES ADVICE ON LOVE

He Tells Her He's Never Going to Marry

"Why does Bob tell me he will never marry?" writes Anita, who seems worried over this. But, let me remind her that no symptom could be more hopeful, in a love affair, than this declaration of eternal bachelorhood, on the part of the boy friend.

Bob like millions of others in that would-be celibate army, is making a last stand.

At his finger ends he has all the masculine arguments. He doesn't want to marry. Instead of settling down with one girl, he enjoys playing 'round with half a dozen. He remembers his old home where his mother and father were terribly tied down by marriage and kids. He wants to extend the days of his freedom—perhaps indefinitely.

But Bob and every other man is entangled in a web stronger than steel. A net that has been millions of years in the making. Ages before a word of history was written, or the first picture writing was scratched on rocks, our cave ancestoress began spinning that web. And every man is powerless when he becomes entangled in its meshes.

Yes, I know our cave ancestoress was supposed to have been clubbed and carried off by the cave man. But you may be sure that cave great grandma gave cave pa the come-on look first.

Specialists who spend their lives studying life forms sum up this business of man caught, like a fly in a web, as the biologic urge."

Poets have prettier names for it. Browning's "She should not have looked at me, if she didn't want me to love her" for a glance. Bah! The fact remains, the look, the word, the friendly gesture are so many meshes in the web, from which there is no escape.

Men have gone into deserts and to the tops of inaccessible mountains to be free from women, but they have come back again feeling that loneliness was frustration—unfulfilment. And they have found in that which they were trying to avoid, richness, happiness.

So when Bob tells Anita he is never going to marry—he is fighting his last battle against the inevitable.

Who Loves More Intensely?

HELEN GRACE CARISLE, author, of "The Wife" and "Mother's Cry," says: "Suppose at this very moment, you, a woman, were suddenly faced with battling the world for your family. What panic! What terror! True, some would courageously succeed. But many would give up. Yet a man's love is so strong, he faces this panic and terror every day. His wife may indulge in the luxury of emotional intensity, BUT, a man's love is so forceful that he goes out each day and conquers the world for her—and what a world these days! Inward fears, everything changing, gigantic economic forces beyond his control—and often he comes home only to complaints that he hasn't brought home enough! No, women may weep and suffer for love, but a man loves so passionately that he fights for love!"

MARK HELLINGER, columnist says: "The greater love depends entirely on the individual. You cannot place all women, or all men, in one category and state definitely that one sex has greater capacity for love than the other.

"Woman, of course, is born to love more intensely than man. Nature and the maternal instinct combine in that direction. But age, circumstances and environment have been known to hand Nature a terrible cuffing-around."

Which Loved Best? Paola or Francesca?

By Nell Brinkley

WE ONLY KNOW about Famous Lovers what their written story tells us. They cannot tell us which loved best. But Dante Alighieri tells of seeing Francesca of Ravenna and Paola da Rimini murdered by Francesca's mishan husband, to whom she had betold to make peace between theso warring houses, in the second circle of hell—but together. The husband was in a still deeper one.

What Paola thought, Dante did not hear. How he loved, or whether he regretted the book and the kiss that sent him to be blown forever by sad, fierce winds like drifting leaves. It was Francesca who told their story.

MARTHA LEE

A Lincoln Dinner

From Martha Lee's Monday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

FEBRUARY is a party month with three holidays to celebrate. First we have Lincoln's birthday—probably the least known of them all—but this is in keeping with the character of the simple, austere man.

We know that with very little preparation he made a speech that has lived through the ages, but did you know that as early as 1836 he was advocating that women take a place in national affairs?

So plan a simple party in honor of this great statesman.

DINNER
Appetizer of Shrimps in Jelly
Roast Capon with Dressing
Stuffed Potato Green Peas
Cider Ice
Apple Pie with Cheese
Coffee

SUPPER
Stuffed Eggs in Hiding
Toasted Cheese Sandwiches
Cucumber Rings
Log Cabin Cake
Coffee

STUFFED EGGS IN HIDING
6 hard-cooked eggs
6 anchovy
1 tablespoon geltaine
2 tablespoons cold water
2 cups tomato juice

Peel the hard-cooked eggs, cut in halves, remove yolks, mash and season with salt, paprika, mustard, lemon juice and mayonnaise. Refill whites and press two halves together with one curled canned anchovy in center of each. Soften gelatin in water, dissolve in boiling tomato juice. Season to taste with salt, pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Chill and pour a little in the bottoms of six small molds. When hard put a filled egg in each mold and pour around the rest of the tomato. Chill until set. Unmold onto lettuce leaves and garnish with mayonnaise. Serves six.

BOUND BUTTONHOLES

A TRULY PROFESSIONAL TOUCH

You've likely noticed that dresses are very much buttoned up this year. Buttons fore. Buttons aft.

And buttons smartest of all, when encircled by that sign of good tailoring—the bound buttonhole.

It affords a simple and attractive method of trimming a cotton dress, and is equally effective on silk or wool. It can be made very decorative by using a contrasting color for the binding.

Hard to make? Not a bit of it. Once you've read through these detailed directions, you may even be inspired to freshen up last year's blouse with a 1935 button-and-buttonhole feature. This is how it's done:

Begin by marking the line for the slash with basting stitches. Next, cut a strip for the binding 1⅝ inches wide and ⅝ inch longer than slash mark. Center this over the line of basting stitches, with right sides of material together, and baste; see diagram 1. Then stitch ¼ inch all round the line marked. Next cut along the slash line—right through garment and binding strip, and clip slash diagonally at corners, diagram 2. Remove bastings. Push binding through to wrong side, laying fullness at each end in a tiny box pleat, diagram 3. Fasten the box pleat at each end with a few overhand stitches, and baste binding to position along sewing edge of outside. Press well.

If garment has a facing, as the two blouses in our sketch have, do not turn in raw edges of buttonhole binding. Cut a straight slash in the facing—along the line of the buttonhole. Clip slash diagonally at corners, diagram 4. Turn in edges of facing—A in diagram 5—and slipstitch them to binding of buttonhole, as in B, diagram 5. Diagram 6 shows finished buttonhole on right side.

If garment has no facing, the finish is a bit different; turn edges of binding in (after pushing binding through to wrong side) and slipstitch along the sewing line of outside. Slipstitch ends so they won't fray.

With directions as simple as these, sewing is a joy, isn't it? Our 40-page book, DO IT THUS . . . AND SEW, is planned for the woman who wishes to make clothes correctly. It has a diagram for each important stitch or step—154 diagrams in all, that show clearly every stitch, every fold, every pin. If you're a beginner, or even if you've sewed for years, you'll want a copy of DO IT THUS . . . AND SEW. With it for reference, your clothes will have that professional look. What $16,000 buys in The American Weekly

A full page in color more than twice the size of any other magazine page in the world . . . more than 5,500,000 families at a cost of less than ⅓ of a cent per family . . . The attention of the entire family instead of a single buying factor.

SOME MAGAZINES put on a tall hat and charge an outlandish price for their advertising space on the premise that they are the exclusive journals of the rich.

These magazines are excellent media for advertising lorgnettes, but the cigarette manufacturer—or, as a matter of fact, any other manufacturer—who counts his output by the millions has to think also of the Smiths and Jones's.

The one sure way to reach the greatest number of "pack-a-day" smokers, automobile owners, consumers of food, apparel, or any of the other necessities or luxuries of life, at the lowest possible advertising cost per individual reached, is through The American Weekly.

Here is a magazine so vitally interesting that it is read regularly by more than five and one half million families.

Some of these people go south in the winter and some of them stay at home. But all of them have the money to buy the things they want and need.

If you want more sales, tell these families who read The American Weekly your story—for you can do it here more economically than you can through any other one form of advertising.

Where this Magazine goes

The American Weekly is the largest magazine in the world. It is distributed through 17 great Hearst Sunday Newspapers. In 597 of America's 995 towns and cities of 10,000 population and over, The American Weekly concentrates 67% of its circulation.

In each of 134 cities, it reaches one out of every two families
In 125 more cities, 40 to 50% of the families
In an additional 165 cities, 30 to 40%
In another 173 cities, 20 to 30%

. . . and, in addition, more than 1,885,000 families in thousands of other communities, large and small, regularly buy and read The American Weekly.

Where can you spend your advertising dollar more effectively?

This Is Life
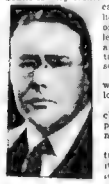
ROBERT E. ROGERS

Dr. Payson Smith, commissioner of education in Massachusetts, in addressing Boston teachers on Saturday afternoon, cautioned them against burdening the children's school day with study materials based on our economic, political, international and sociological difficulties.



Although he seemed to admit that this particular stunt is very fashionable nowadays in "modern" education, he said that he did not believe it was fair to load the minds of young people with the problems which belong to matu e men and women—and which, incidentally completely baffle those seniors

I must confess that I agree with him heartily and have for a long time

When it came time to send my child to school I looked into the practices of two schools in my neighborhood

One seemed a somewhat traditional and conservative school in its methods. The other was sounded by a brilliant professor's wife—I mean, a professor's brilliant wife, which is not always the same thing—who was popularly supposed to educate her very youthful pupils by reading aloud to them from the works of H. G. Wells.

Robert E. Rogers

When we did a little looking round at that school we were told that it was the practice there for the children in the elementary grades, beginning at the age of six or thereabout, to be taken on tours of inspection of shops and stores, factories, slaughter houses and railroad yards, in order that the children might become familiar with our social and industrial problems and grow up civic minded.

We sent the child to the other school.

Moral Issue

The trouble with trying to teach young children or even adolescents about the matters which are of such primary importance today is that it is impossible to give them any of the complex and far-reaching backgrounds for these subjects.

The result is that the problems must be simplified to such an extent that any possible statement of the case has no validity and will nearly always tend to whittle down to a moral issue which the children must take on faith from the teacher.

And that moral issue will invariably be based on the teacher's sense of right and wrong.

Even with an exact syllabus prepared by competent educational experts, the selection, arrangement and emphasis of that material must be that of the teacher's individual conviction.

Such a selection and emphasis may bring the material within the scope of the child's understanding, but it will remain there in a sketchy, predigested and, usually, dogmatic form, which may preclude honest attempts at an impartial point of view in later years

It is a wise provision that forbids the teaching of religion in the public schools

I am convinced that it is equally wise to forbid the teaching of political and economic questions which in their very nature are partisan, since so many of them are outside the possibility of objective and scientific treatment.

The child will probably pick up a certain amount of it at home, which will probably be more realistic than the theories of educators on the subject

I, for one, should hate to have the job explaining the righteousness and economic validity of the latest federal housing plan here in Boston to children who live in the district where parents face the loss of their homes and business, without any guarantee of substitute conditions in which they will be as well off and comfortable as they are now.

Best Method

Far better to allow our children to grow up with the empirical knowledge that life is a very uncertain proposition in which no contemporary dogmas about political method are lastingly true than to have to accept at their face value theories about society which were unheard of 50 years ago and will be obsolete in 50 more.

Far better to teach them the literature that pictures and interprets life, to learn that the more it changes the more it is the same thing, and thus to free themselves from belief in current infallibilities.

375 WORKERS
Walk Out in Lynn

Involved in a dispute over piece work wages, 375 of the 1400 employes of the Gold Seal Shoe Company, Lynn, walked out today. Plant officials admitted that they were "key" workers whose absence could tie up the whole factory.

Frank McDermott, president of the Lynn council of the United Shoe and Leather Workers, meanwhile was in conference with officers of the Flint Shoe Company. The 100 workers in that plant also were said to be ready to walk out.

LEGION, Elks War ON REDS
TEACHERS AID CAMPAIGN

The American Legion drive against the menace of communism opens at the YD Post clubhouse, 200 Huntington avenue, tonight.

The post Americanization officer, Royal K. Hayes, past national chaplain of the Yankee Division Veterans' Association, will outline the plan of campaign.

Meanwhile as the various patriotic organizations swing into their concerted drives against radicalism a steadily increasing wave of public consciousness against the danger was growing today.

A stream of circulars were going out warning the people to act.

And as the Elks' board of strategy whipped its campaign into line, the American Legion speeded its creation of a new post, to be called the Joyce Kilmer post, its members Boston teachers.

John J. McKenna, exalted grand ruler of the Boston Lodge of Elks who is in active charge of the campaign to stamp out Russian radicalism here, said that similar campaigns are underway throughout the country.

Legislators are receiving letters telegrams and postcards from their constituents, calling for a tightening of the laws against incoming aliens — and an elasticity in the laws permitting them to be deported.

Another step in the campaign to educate the people of the Commonwealth to the threat of communism is the establishment of a speakers' bureau.

That the legislature is awake to the danger is best evidenced by their offer to establish proper laws as soon as the patriotic organizations have outlined what they want.

HOWARD LOSES
Driver's License

Charles P. Howard, chairman of the State Commission on Administration and Finance, has had his driver's license suspended by the motor registry, it was revealed today.

The suspension came as the result of an agreement between former Registrar Ryan and the governor's committee on street and highway safety.

Three charges were preferred, two by the state police and one by the metropolitan district.

He was accused of failing to slow down for an intersection in Shrewsbury, improperly passing a car in Templeton and speeding in Cambridge.

Trouble loomed in Newburyport, 200 workers claimed victim in Amesbury as unrest swept through the rest of the shoe industry in Merrimack Valley today.

At Newburyport, Atty. Marshall James E. Sullivan reported that Lynn shoeworkers were en route to his city to picket the Massachusetts shoe factory, one of the A. F. Beck Company chain.

Despite the fact that several thousand members of the United Shoe and Leather Workers' Union voted to accept this wage reduction, cutters, lasters, packers and treers local, and edgemakers local repudiated it.

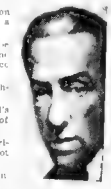
O.O. McINTYRE
NEW YORK
Day By Day



O. O. McIntyre

New York, Feb. 11—Diary: Up and found Emma Lindsay-Squier's latest book autographed, a card from Gene and Polly Tunney in Italy and a note from Mary Pickford.

By and by talking to Lee Moore whose laugh heartens me as much as a cocktail did once upon a time.

Carole Lombard. And Adrienne Ames and Bruce Cabot there.

Also Sir William Wiseman, Lady Furness and the Count of Warwick quite noble to see.

So talking to Will Stewart and Jules Glaenzer until Harry Evans went to his dance.

Rupert Hughes, very deaf himself, is doing much in writing and lecturing to relieve the self-consciousness of those afflicted.

He thinks much of it is due to stubbornness.

Scarcely anybody hesitates to decorate their faces with glasses when eyesight grows faulty, but nearly everybody shies at the use of the far less conspicuous ear phone.

Rupert also mastered lip reading. An accomplished musician, he never misses a symphony and is an ardent theater-goer.

Snappy Letters

Terhune accused Hammond of a minor inaccuracy in the spelling of a name and intimated the most blundering pup in his widely known kennels would have known better.

Hammond replied starchily.

"Sir: They tell me that all dogs are fond of you. If I did not believe that rumor as I would chloroform my favorite Gordon setter."

Personal nomination for the most recent of the embarrassing moments—the frock coated lawyer's zipper plate popping out, arguing before the U. S. Supreme court.

Now that Will H. Hays has bought a ranch adjoining Watterson Rothacker at that suburban paradise, Tujunfo, near Los Angeles, the community can boast, tit, tat, ton, of three famous estates in a row.

On the other side of Rothacker, Winfield R. Sheehan is clearing away the tangle for a modest hacienda where he can get away from it all.

A distinct metropolitan type is the gay old boy of the theater.

Past 50 and a worshipper of Eros and Mammon, he gives supper parties after the play and is a marvel in recruiting beautiful chorus girls.

An easy mark for the easy touch—as long as it doesn't go higher than a $20 bill—he revels in his purchased popularity. In a bep to all the buckmail bait and is never hooked.

Indeed, he plays his fish like the veteran angler and after his fashion has as much fun as anybody.

Gay Old Boys

The gay old boys are almost invariably abstemious, never write letters to be read to 12 perfect strangers or give checks.

As a general thing they are bald and inclined to a paunchiness.

Arthur Brisbane's weekly output, at 70, surpasses that of all New York columnists combined.

Lucius Beebe, he has been told, was the most copious of the weeps ere when the staff heard Stanley Walker had resigned his city editorship.

He stepped from a snowy limousine in front of fashionable Perry's at the dinner hour a stove-pipe hatted aristocrat in top hat, cable collared great coat, and an ebony muffler, ivory-knobbed cane and white gloves.

A rollicking session in a Turkish bath and [illegible] a cigarette passing, called out: "Watch out for soup stains, gentlemen."

MYSTERY BABY GONE WITH 'DAD'

New Puzzle

FATHER-UNCLE SNARL STILL UNTANGLED

Salisbury, Feb. 11—Still puzzled as to whether he is Everett Bennett, uncle, or Edgar P. Bengert, father of the two-year-old girl he has been attending, police were given a new mystery of Toothpick Point today in the flight of the male nursemaid.

Uncle or father, the devoted attendant of the infant, vanished from the Toothpick Point shack, taking the baby with him, police discovered.

They are attempting, in a new development in the investigation, to serve a Texas court process on Edgar P. Bengert, father of the infant and a former Harvard student, in a matter of a note for several thousand dollars.

The court order, seeking recovery of the money, was obtained by a Texas financing company against Margaret Morgan Bengert, said to be Bennett's sister, and against Bengert himself.

In R. I. Auto

Margaret Morgan Bengert is the name given by the mother of the child born December 17 in the Anna Jacques Hospital, Newburyport.

But—Bennett of Bengert, the infant and her attendant have vanished from the Toothpick Point shack, police being told that the departure was made in a car bearing Rhode Island license plates.

Although word was received in Boston today that the infant's mother is an instructor at the State Teachers' College at Athens, W. Va., and had declared the man with the child to be her husband, Police Chief Harold F. Congdon said today that he has had no such official information.

The mother, according to the word West Virginia, declared that the infant was in good hands while under the father's scientific care at the shack.

"Bennett's" car, police were informed, is registered to a Malcolm Bennett in Providence, R. I.

SUSPENDED

Everett Officer TO GET HEARING

Patrolman Frank L. Walsh of the Everett police, charged with his brother, Alphonsus G. Walsh, with attack with a dangerous weapon on John E. McAleer of Revere Beach parkway, Everett, will be given a public hearing tomorrow.

Word on the hearing was received by the 11-year veteran of the court case against him and his brother had been again continued today in Malden district court until Feb. 18.

The continuation was ordered because McAleer, with 56 stitches in his face and two lacerations, at Whidden Memorial hospital, was unable to appear in court.

It is alleged that McAleer was attacked by the police officer and brother early in the morning of February 4, outside a night club in Everett square.

Today, because of McAleer's improved condition at the hospital, bail against the brothers was reduced from $10,000 to $1,000 each.

It's Up to You

TO THE PEOPLE OF METROPOLITAN BOSTON:

The Emergency Campaign of 1935 makes sound sense and justifies your support because (1) the great institutions participating in the Campaign sorely need the $4,000,000 asked; and (2) Metropolitan Boston definitely needs these institutions; and (3) our American system of private hospitals and social agencies is a permanent, integral part of our American scheme.

From the very beginning of our country, our social order has imposed upon us moral and civic obligations toward our fellow Americans in adversity.

Three preceding generations, responsive to this obligation, have established for our use in every progressive American community in our present extreme hour of need a remarkably fine system of private hospitals, charities and social agencies.

The present generation of Americans, outside Metropolitan Boston, in their several communities have already banded together to preserve these institutions for the service of their needy. Our generation in our community is now being called upon to do what every other progressive community in our land has already done, namely, to contribute voluntarily for the maintenance of our private hospitals, our private charities and our private social agencies.

If you want our community to continue to be, as it has in the past, a community that gladly recognizes its moral and social responsibility toward fellow men in adversity, GIVE AND GIVE GENEROUSLY.

It's up to you!

THE EMERGENCY CAMPAIGN OF 1935.
General Chairman.

STATE DIRECTS OXFORD PROBE

Oxford, Feb. 11—State Detective Sergeants John Horgan and Joseph Crescio arrived here from Boston today to head the search for Miss Etta Riel. A hidden grave or clues to her vanishing were sought.

Nearly three months ago, the 20-year-old State Teachers' College student disappeared after she had become a mother. She had secured a complaint in Webster court, charging Henry "Red" Sawin, former Bates College student, with being father of the child.

Detectives Horgan and Crescio arrived as State Detective Edward J. McCarthy, in charge of this territory, was conferring with District Attorney Owen A. Hoban of Worcester County.

During the conference, McCarthy telephoned the Essex County jail in Salem and talked with a marriage relative of the girl on a story that he had seen Miss Riel on a trolley car in Copley square, Boston, last Thursday night.

The relative, arrested Saturday night in Marblehead for alleged theft of an automobile, declared he was standing on the street when he saw Miss Riel, whose sister married his Brookline brother, sitting in the trolley car.

Sawin appeared voluntarily before State Detective McCarthy to deny that he was the father of her child or that he had ever promised to marry her.

FREE LAMP Service DEMANDED

Representative Arthur E. Paul of Roxbury today demanded at a State House hearing that the Boston Edison Company restore free lamp service to consumers.

He indicated that small home owners are not benefiting by the new system of a slightly reduced rate with a lamp charge.

F. M. Ives, Edison Company counsel said his concern had considered the free bulb service desirable and that the change came last September 1 only after rates had been reduced one-half cent per kilowatt hour cutting $800,000 from the company's annual revenue.

To offset this loss, the lamp service was abandoned with a saving to the company of $500,000, leaving, however, a net deficit of $300,000, he said.

He warned the committee on power and light, before whom the petition was heard, that action by them would result in complications detrimental to many.

THIRD FIRE Razes Church

The First Congregational Church of Cliftondale, after surviving two other fires within two years, was a mere shell today after a third.

Pinochle is rapidly becoming a necessary social accomplishment say those in the know, and now comes that famous fashion authority and arbiter of social custom, Emily Post, with her word of approval for this new-old card game.

"Pinochle," says Mrs. Post, "is a fascinating game. I can easily understand why it appeals to so many bridge enthusiasts."

Quite a few of Boston's socially prominent names appear on entry blanks being returned to the Pinochle Tournament Editor for admission to the Boston Evening American's Pinochle Tournament at Hotel Bradford, starting February 18.

The tournament, one of 15 such tournaments being held throughout the United States to determine the national pinochle champion, is being held under the general direction of P. Hal Sims, leading bridge and pinochle authority.

Assisting him are two of New England's outstanding bridge players and teachers, Lombard Williams and Miss Rosamond Vahey.

There will be nine sessions of play throughout the three weeks of the tournament. The game will be two-handed pinochle and the play will be individual, for games not points. A thousand points will constitute a game.

The first prize will be $300 and a trip to New York City—all expenses paid—to compete in the National Pinochle Tournament to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria. The second and third prizes will be $100 each.

All that is required to enter the contest is that you fill in and send to the Pinochle Tournament Editor the entry blank printed accompanying this article. A nominal fee of 25 cents, for the first day's play only, is to be turned over to the Emergency Campaign.

WOMAN Is Mystery IN JAIL

HIDES IDENTITY, DOESN'T MOVE

On a cot in the women's section of Suffolk County jail lies the most remarkable actress—or the most courageous woman — in Boston police annals.

But police aren't sure which she is.

They don't know her name. And City Hospital specialists don't know the nature of her disease, if she has one.

She was sentenced to four months by Judge Michael J. Murray for evading bills.

She gave the name of Elizabeth Sloane. But that is not her name.

All that is known of her is that she is a horsewoman, cultured and refined.

She says that she is paralyzed.

But Policewoman Lillian Taylor, who went to Albany to bring her back, says:

"Not bunk at all. She is the most courageous woman I have ever ministered to."

"Elizabeth Sloane" has not moved her body from the waist down for nearly two months. And the paralysis is slowly creeping into her right arm.

QUINCY Yard Got What "IT WANTED"

Washington, Feb. 11 (AP)—A statement that he heard the New York Shipbuilding Corporation arranging with others of the "Big Three" companies for dividing naval contracts was made today before the Senate munitions committee by George B. Yard, former assistant to Clinton L. Bardo, one time president of the corporation.

"It was general knowledge what each shipyard wanted," the witness testified, apparently reluctantly, "and they generally got what they wanted—about 100 per cent."

The "surprise" witness answered questions slowly, but soon began telling in detail of conversations he claimed to have heard over the telephone between Bardo, Homer Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Company, and S. S. Wakeman, president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company of Fore River, Mass., all members of the "Big Three."

AUSTEN LAKE on Maranville Spoils Sport Legend

THERE SHOULD BE A PUNCHY Y. M. C. A. moral in this Something that Sister Aimee Semple McPherson Hutton could dish up in her husky contralto to an Amen chorus. This should preach the triumph of right living and set the reader to turning spiritual cartwheels

Austen Lake

But no! There is no moral. Because Rabbit Maranville, the Braves old wastrel who, by the Y. M. C. A. yardstick, should have burned out his physical filament long ago, has outlasted Herbie Pennock, the Red Sox Apostle of hygiene, in a free style race that began 23 years ago.

It was 1912 when Rabbit came up from Springfield's gashouse district as a pert, sassy bantam who talked through his teeth, and when Herb Pennock joined the Athletics with a full kit of good habits and his military school paint still fresh.

There are players on the Braves and Red Sox who were not yet in pinafores when Rabbit and Herbie came to the majors. Bobby Brown and Moose Solters for example. And until Herbie retired this winter the two had outworn all the old grizzards who started with them from scratch.

What Price Virtue?

IF TEMPERATE LIVING IS the secret of long life, then Rabbit should now be a physical husk, tap-tapping on a cane and forced to live on dandelion tops and invalid broth, instead of outwearing such virtuous livers as Pennock, who spurned the easy indulgences of baseball life, of which late hours and boisterous beverages are only a few.

He had danced on a Times Square taxi top and sung solos to the theater crowds

He has run nude races along the eighth-story ledge of Pittsburgh's Schenley Hotel, speared goldfish with a table fork in the dining room fountain at the Waldorf, slugged chins, kidnaped trolleys, slept in flower beds

But Pennock led a quiet, blameless life in which he balanced his diet, took placid strolls in the evening or penned thoughtful letters to his family. He was a great book reader too, not books of the drugstore kind, but hard books like Vanity Fair and David Copperfield.

He was quiet, courteous, much liked in his profession and as fine in his baseball line as Rabbit was in his.

What Does the "Y" Say?

THE RESULT? WELL, at 43 with a game leg, Rabbit is back asking for another helping, while Pennock, at 41, has passed into the athletic limbo of coaching and scouting.

There is an oddity in this which does not fit the copy-book teachings and health-habits that I learned as a schoolboy.

If good deeds and fine living shine like candlelight in this naughty world, I wonder why the active span of such men as Grover Cleveland Alexander and Babe Ruth, who hiccoughed their gentle ways through life, should have outworn those of George Sisler, Joe Sewell, Cy Perkins and an army of other heroes who always got A in deportment, ate their spinach and washed their necks below the collar line.

If anything, Rabbit's and Babe's lights have shone further than those of the model athletes, if one may measure them by the public's druthers.

Maybe this is because they have done openly what most fans yearn secretly to do, but which for want of resolution, have not. For I suspect that even the most model citizen of both sexes secretly hordes impulses and longings that they would not care to confess.

I must ask my Y. M. C. A. friends about this. They may be able to tell why Rabbit, the old Braves wastrel, is fit, fighting and a public chum while Pennock, the Red Sox apostle of hygiene, is in physical storeage as a member of the gentleman's ensemble.

Swallows Own Race Medicine

WALTER O'HARA, THE Narragansett horse track owner, through whose ringer so many millions of betting money has passed, himself is one of the country's best horse plungers, who has spent a fortune on the hazy probabilities of horse legs.

The report is that he dropped $50,000 at Hialeah during the recent meeting.

Finicky Sport

EDWARD EVERETT SPITZ, the 52-year-old three-cushion billiards expert from Brookline who is still "alive" in the New York tourney, said recently he hoped his father, who is 77, does not hear about his skill, lest dad suspect that Edward is misspending his youth.

BEING A FINICKY SPORT, requiring long and constant hours of practice, figure skating is followed by the leisured few, little known to the masses who prefer thrills to frills.

Only those who, like Maribel Vinson of Winchester and Polly Blodgett of Brookline, learned to glide when they were still tiny, spindle legged tots, may ever rise to the heights.

For perfect poise and fine balance every small muscle in the body must be trained and tuned like a fine violin.

You begin at the tender age of seven, before muscles begin to set, or you never scale the ramparts of glory.

Broken Mat Tenet

BY MATCHING DAN O'MAHONEY and Nick Lutze next Friday, Paul Bowser is ignoring a fine old promotional principle of wrestling. It is customary to pit a rowdy wrestler against a "gentleman" wrestler to rouse the patrons to a proper partisan pitch.

But here Bowser has matched two of his most refined, polished and courteous mat wallowers who never stoop to garroting unless they are garrotted first.

SEES DANGER IN OWL TILTS

PREDICTS SIX-CLUB RACE FOR FLAG

By Associated Press

San Francisco, Feb. 11—Joe Cronin thinks night baseball is a "big joke" and hopes the American League will never play it.

The "boy manager" of the majors, whose sale to the Boston Red Sox by Washington a few months ago, set tongues wagging over the biggest deal in the history of the game, is emphatic in the belief that owl baseball is a fad and nothing else.

"Sure, I know it will draw," said Cronin, "so would football on roller skates. It still doesn't make night baseball a good game, in my opinion.

"They have been playing it nearly a hundred years in daytime. It has survived the worst depressions and made money.

"I don't know of any reason now why they should start making a circus side show of it. It's a game where the quickness of the eye is matched against speed and trickery.

DANGEROUS

"The element of danger alone would turn me against night ball, if nothing else. Imagine standing up against the fast ones of a Walter Johnson, Lefty Grove or Schoolboy Rowe.

"From what I have heard players in minor leagues alternating day and night games haven't been very keen about the arc light stuff. Most of them dislike the idea cordially. It upsets their nervous systems, disrupts their diets and affects their play.

"If the National League wants to waste it's on the lights, let it go to it. That will make the American League the only real big league in the country.

LINCOLN Day Homage ON AIR

RADIO HONORS EMANCIPATOR

BY N. E. T.

Futile is the thought, but a wee bit of imagination stretching carries one to the plausible conclusion that Abraham Lincoln would undoubtedly have been the possessor of an arresting voice personality on the air—had radio been in existence when he lived.

As it is, and rightly, every conceivable sort of homage to his memory takes to the air tonight and tomorrow with one more observance of his birthday at hand.

FLOYD GIBBONS' PAGE OF THRILLS AND MYSTERY

Boston Man Smokes Calmly as Death Creeps on Scituate Sands

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

Clean out those shotguns, boys and girls. And you, Johnny, run down to the hardware store and get Uncle Floyd a box of shells. Sixteen gauge, Johnny—and hurry right back, for today we're going hunting with Eugene A. (Bud) Fisher, of 1560 Commonwealth avenue, Brighton.

FLOYD GIBBONS

And if we stick right close to Bud—don't stray too far afield in our hunt for birds in the marshes of Scituate harbor—we may follow him through that terrible experience he had on the morning of August 20, 1919.

It seems that on that fateful day, Bud sort of put his foot in it.

As a matter of fact, Bud literally put both feet in it—and he's doggone lucky he ever got them out again.

Bud has done a lot of hunting in his time and not all for birds, either.

Back in 1917-18 he hunted Germans with a 30-30 government rifle in the fields of northern France. And it must have been a small war after all, for Bud says in his letter that he is one of the last people I spoke to in that little town to the left of Triangle Farm, before I got mine.

He says to come out and have supper with him if I'm ever in the neighborhood. Sometime in the duck season, Bud.

But hold on there, Gibbons. This is an adventure yarn—not a reunion. Let's get back to that hunting trip.

Bud hadn't been back from overseas very long when he got the urge to handle a gun again. He got up at 3 o'clock one morning and started out with his shotgun to hunt for shore birds around Scituate Harbor.

To get to his b'and, he had to cross the shallow little river that cuts across the Scituate marsh.

Usually, Bud crossed that river at a certain place where he knew the going was good, but this morning, before he got to the usual place, he saw a flock of plover settle on the mud flat by the river, and thought he'd like to take a shot at them.

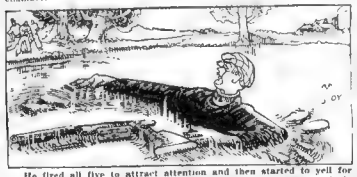
He slid down the bank along which he was traveling and started across the flat, moving slowly so as not to frighten the birds. He got about 10 feet from the bank, when he noticed something that disturbed him. At every step his feet were sinking deeper and deeper into the mud.

Bud started to turn back—and that was a big mistake. As he turned, he put all his weight on one foot, and it went into the mud up to his knee. He put the other font down and tried to pull the first one free. That one went in just as deep as the other.

By this time, Bud realized what he was up against. Quick-sand! He knew then that any further struggle to free himself would only sink him deeper into that black, sucking mud.

He tried to lighten his weight by throwing his tin decoys and his extra boxes of shells up onto the bank, but the exertion of throwing only settled him deeper in the mud.

Bud still had his shot-gun—an automatic, with five shells in the chamber.



He fired all five to attract attention and then started to yell for help. But it was 4 o'clock in the morning on a deserted marsh. Nobody heard those frantic, pleading cries.

Then it was that Bud began to curse himself for having thrown away his extra boxes of shells—the only things he'd had that would have attracted attention to his desperate plight.

He began calling for help at intervals, hoping someone passing by the neighborhood might hear them. An hour went by, without results. He looked out across the flats, and suddenly, a sickening thought struck him.

The tide was coming in! In another hour or so the flat he was on would be covered with three or four feet of water.

Now Bud began to do some serious thinking—began to yell with renewed vigor. A milk wagon clumped across a bridge not far away, but the driver paid no attention to Bud's frenzied yells. Bud learned later that the driver was nearly deaf, and couldn't hear him.

At 5 o'clock the water was within 20 feet of Bud, and he was up to his chest in mud. By 5:12 on Bud's wrist watch, the water had reached him—seemed to be spinning the mud and letting him down faster.

He kept on calling every so often, but got no response, and by this time Bud didn't expect [illegible] any.

Bud had taken [illegible] its from his pocket and stuck them in his hat. The water was up to his armpits now, and he knew he didn't have much longer [illegible].

He decided to smoke one last cigaret, and then, when the water hit his mouth, to "drink as much as he could and get it over with quickly." He lit the cigaret and smoked it, while the water rose to his neck—to his chin.

As he smoked, his mind went back over all the tight places he had ever been in his life. [illegible] of the time the Germans had put nine machine gun bullets through his pack in that wheat field at Triangle Farm.

He gave a [illegible] yell, probably the last one he would ever give—and then he looked up at the bank again to get the sweetest thrill he ever had in his life.

Over the top of that bank three men came into view. One of them had a rope and he threw it out to Bud.

In 10 minutes those men had Bud out on the bank again. Bud thanked them and picked up his gun and shells from where he had thrown them on the bank.

"Where are you going?" one of the men asked him. "Shooting," said Bud. "What," said the man, "After that experience?"

And here is how Bud explains things:

"You know, Floyd, what they used to do in France when a flier cracked up. They sent him right up again, to take his mind off it. I knew that if I didn't go hunting right then, I'd never go again. So I went hunting."

And Bud says he had the best day's shooting he ever had in his life.

Can you tie that yarn of Bud Fisher's, boys and girls? Well, let's see you try it anyway. Send that story in to me. Tomorrow I'm shooting another thrill story to you, telling how flames menaced a woman's life with terrible suddenness.

Modern's Feature

Dickie Moore is the adorable youngster in this dramatic story, torn from his mother's arms through the brutal interference of a family of thoroughly disagreeable in-laws.

Vivian Tobin is the misunderstood and unhappy mother, who has a heartbreaking struggle when her husband is killed and her baby awarded by the courts to his grandmother.

Eventually their tangled domestic affairs come to a happy ending, but not until Russell Hopton comes on the scene, as the persistent young widower with a daughter of his own, another captivating child played by Cora Sue Collins.

On the same program is "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

TRADERS Study LABOR Outlook

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Besides their other troubles, Congress and gold, traders are finding the labor situation less to their liking than in many months.

The kick on the motor code disposition was more or less expected. But the newer complaint on the cigarette code appearance as something of a surprise since it was largely the result of administration between capital and labor. Finally there is the wage situation on public works. Minimum wages and hourly scales on public works compare favorable to those of private workers are asked. Government competition for labor would be just about unbeatable. Who would want to leave a job that would be steady just as long as the treasury held out?

Walton L. Crocker

The John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company of Boston enjoyed the largest business of its history during 1934. The report of the board of directors submitted today by President Walton L. Crocker to policyholders at the annual meeting reveals substantial increases in assets, insurance written and in force, and an increase in surplus. In keeping with the policy of sufficient liquidity to meet extraordinary demands President Crocker informed policyholders a fund of $100,000,000 was intact. It consists of cash and government securities and other obligations all maturing within five years.

Notebook: Steel production is beginning to flatten out . . . Motor demand is said to have peaked . . . Scrap prices, however, are holding very well, and we would take as much faith in this steel index as any other . . . Besides it is current Treasury O. C. Director comptroller of the currency, says the nation's banks are in fine shape. . . Little evidence remains of the 1929 collapse. . . In fact the entire system has been rebuilt . . . Now if confidence, which is the crux, only returns, where the huge money reserves they hold are used all will be well.

Latest word from Washington via the grapevine line is that before it is all finished we will be on through the financial wringer this year. This, together with tired eating, presents a problem to solving the weakness of rail shares last week. Now this is fairly glum stuff, as a rule. If things look worst at the low. So a bit of analysis is probably in order to make sure these shares are not embraced at the bottom. We would not jump to bearish conclusions and we would analyze rails.

* * *

Briefs: The intense interest in the coal decision is made the more acute by delays . . . Although much more unimportant cases have required more time, it does not good to remind traders they should not be too impatient . . . But then, too, rest assured the world is restless while waiting for a decision . . . Especially London . . . And this attitude is probably communicated to domestic trading interests . . . And all the while the odds on a favorable decision are shrinking.

* * *

From a stock market standpoint, it may be said that the market is doing its best to construct a working base, and a decent rally could be built on. Personally we do not think it will be anything more than a rally. Even if a favorable decision catches prices on the upswing and carries the list to the January tops. Our idea is selling strength. Then sit back and await trade developments over the late spring and early summer.

Crosby Steam Co.

Stockholders of Crosby Steam Gage & Valve Company, Cambridge, Mass., voted to reduce stated value of common stock from $300,600 to $250,000.

Stock Market Time Table

10-11—An easy tone prevailed in first hour of quiet dullness. Rails displayed weakness. Metals and chemicals also recorded losses running to more than point. Dullness was extreme. Sales were 80,000 shares.

11-12—Shares continued to drift lower in the second hour. Atchison and American Tobacco were down more than a point. Sales approximated 140,000 shares.

12-1—Market turned steady in the third hour. Tobaccos were firm. U. S. Tobacco was up more than 2. Metals and miners held losses but failed to move lower. Sales amounted to 210,000 shares.

1-2—Dullness of previous hours worked higher in the fourth hour. Other groups were steady and dull. Sales were 250,000 shares.

2-3—Shares eased further in the final hour. Selling was noted in utilities. Rails were easy. Late tone was steady. Sales were estimated at 320,000 shares.

In New England, as in other parts of the country, merchandising trade got a start in the opening month of the new year. Natural reaction from the brisk pace of December, adverse weather, and the fact that comparison is now being made with a period of 1934 when larger sales were being reported, all played their part.

New England department stores in January suffered a 4 per cent decline in sales from those of a year ago according to figures of Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. In December there had been a gain of 7.6 per cent and for all of 1934 a gain of 5.5 per cent over 1933.

Each New England state but Vermont had a decline. That for Massachusetts was 3.4 per cent and that for Boston 3.6 per cent, record by states for January was as follows:

	Jan., 1935 against Jan., 1934
Connecticut stores	−3.8%
Maine stores	−6.9
Massachusetts stores	−3.4
New Hampshire stores	−6.8
Rhode Island stores	−6.9
Vermont stores	−1.4

UTILITIES ARE EASY

Atchison, New York Central, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific and other rail favorites suffered losses running to a point.

Utility shares met more liquidation. Commonwealth & Southern and United Corp. preferreds, though, were active and, strong with the former going through for a new high for the year.

U. S. Steel was depressed and Bethlehem, Republic and other steel shares were quiet.

General Motors and Chrysler were sluggish. Chemicals held fairly steady as did tobaccos, and aviations, while mining shares were dull and easier.

Farm implements were easier in sympathy with the decline in wheat.

Decision

Some observers expressed the opinion that, while the Supreme Court's decision on the gold controversy tended to increase the feeling of suspense, there was much less probability of drastic changes in the markets either way when the decisions finally become known.

Bear interpreters of the market thought that the court might make its awaited announcement tomorrow afternoon. These based their belief on the fact that tomorrow is an American holiday and that, if the judgment is revealed after 2 p. m., foreign speculators will be unable to take advantage of it, to the disadvantage of the dollar, because their markets will be closed. At the same time, they pointed out, Congress will be in session and immediate steps can be taken to overcome an adverse ruling.

Aside from the gold factor, part of the market's sluggish behavior was attributed to indications that business and industry may reach their peaks much earlier this spring than in the past several years.

Legion Declares War
In Behalf of AMERICA

THE most powerful and most active patriotic force in the United States today is the American Legion.

It is dedicated to the creed of Americanism.

It wants peace with all countries—its members know the realities of war better than any professional "pacifist"—but it knows also that the price of peace is preparedness.

It deserves the hundred per cent support of every sane and sensible citizen.

FRANK N. BELGRANO, Jr., National Commander of the Legion, made a speech in New York recently that charts the course our Government should steer, and must steer, if America's heritage is to be preserved.

Commander Belgrano said:

"Our land is filled with the propaganda of alien 'isms.' The agents of Communism preach their doctrine of destruction openly. They have invaded our schools and our churches. They are calling openly for a revolution to overthrow our Government and set up the political slavery of Moscow.

"WE OF THE LEGION ARE MOBILIZED TO A MAN TO COMBAT THAT MENACE. WE ARE CALLING TO YOU—TO EVERY PATRIOTIC AMERICAN—TO JOIN US IN THIS WAR ON THE ENEMIES OF OUR REPUBLIC.

"If Europe wants its Communism, Hitlerism, Fascism or any other 'ism,' let them have it. Here in America there is room only for Americanism."

AND turning to the subject of our dangerously weak national defenses, Commander Belgrano continued:

"We demand:

"1—Immediate construction of every ship allowed us by the London treaty, and the men to man them.

"2—A standing army of sufficient strength to protect our shores, supported by a National Guard and trained citizen reserve sufficient to form the nucleus of a citizen army in time of war.

"3—An adequate air defense of our coasts and possessions."

In days when patriotism seems so often at a discount the Legion looms up as a bulwark of liberty and security—"a great rock" in a land weary of quack experiments and crazy theorizing.

"Keep America American and keep it safe for its own people" is the sum total of what this mighty organization stands for.

The nation may well congratulate itself that such an organization exists—a million strong—to warn it of perils at home or abroad, and to safeguard it against the foes of its own household.

Another "League"
Information Needed

The Legislature on Beacon Hill is being asked to raise money to establish the "Massachusetts League of Municipalities."

The league, at an estimated expense of $15,000 a year, would act as a clearing house for "information of value to cities and towns," its proponents claim.

Although $15,000 a year is not a large sum for the old Bay State to spend, it can be recalled that Ben Franklin, the old Boston printer, once told us a secret:

"Save the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves."

Before we voted for the appropriation, we would demand definite facts regarding the alleged "information of value."

And we would want to know whether "thousands" or "millions" might be saved.

If the big cities have this information lying around, WHY haven't they made USE OF IT THEMSELVES?

Barring Communists
Maine in the Lead

Communism is reported to have gained a foothold in Maine.

It already controls a Maine town, according to Representative Cleveland Sleeper, Jr., elected to the Legislature at Augusta from Rockland.

So Mr. Sleeper is fighting in behalf of a bill to prohibit recognition of ballots of any political party which advocates the overthrow of local, State or national government by force or violence.

It would also bar from the ballots those carrying on a program of sedition or treason.

James L. Boyle, Maine State adjutant of the American Legion, has made plain that Representative Sleeper's bill has the support of the Legion.

County Income Tax
And What Next?

We need some abolitionists today.

We need them to draft a sane program of taxation, abolishing Federal and State income taxes, which have as their slogan "Soak the Thrifty!"

If a sane taxation program is not adopted, as already laid out in the manufacturers' general sales tax, we will almost certainly see the present pernicious systems extended.

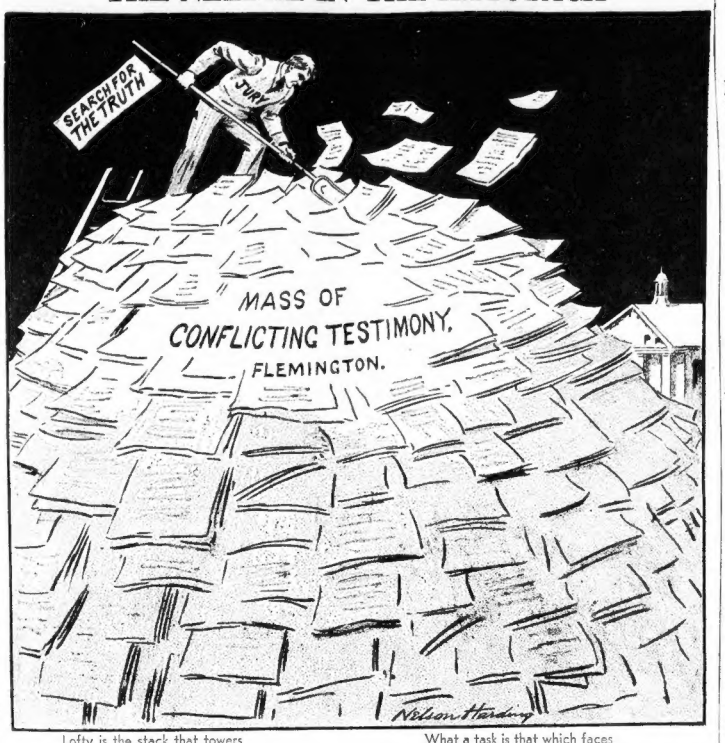
New York City already has a city income tax levy.

New Castle County, Delaware, steps into the limelight with a county income tax.

If we do not act speedily for the relief of the bled-white taxpayer, citizens of Massachusetts can expect to see themselves called on to pay three—and perhaps even four—income taxes yearly.

If they can!

THE NEEDLE IN THE HAYSTACK



Lofty is the stack that towers
High above the little courthouse.
Day by day it has been rising,

What a task is that which faces
Those whose duty is to search it
Patiently and surely, seeking

Listen, World
By Elsie Robinson

A Woman's Best Years—Maybe

Once I visited Death Valley. I have never forgotten it—never quite shaken off the strange shock of it.

I had known, of course, that Death Valley was a desert. Deserts were not new to me—being born in the West, I was aware of their grim austerity—had even come to see a certain beauty in it. How restful that silence must be after the city's clatter, I thought. How peaceful the monotonous days!

Elsie Robinson

So ran my anticipations. And yet I was to be utterly shocked by the reality. The desert's vastness and silence—there they were, just as I had expected. But what I had not been prepared for was the mockery of the desert.

BLAZING NOONS

I had foreseen a place of brooding death—a dirge in dun dunes. But here was a thousand miles of tumbled rainbows! Here were delicate dawns, tender twilights that trembled with all the vague, sweet dreams of spring.

Here were blazing noons—flaunting a madness of gold and scarlet. And passionate nights, mysterious, alluring, heart-breaking in their brooding loveliness.

The desert—this! This place of exquisite enchantment. Death Valley? But never did earth breathe such allurement, such promise! Yet presently I saw that therein lay its tragedy. Promises? Yes! But they all led nowhere.

That was years ago. But never since have I seen the puzzled husband of a middle-aged wife that my mind did not turn back to the blasted beauty of Death Valley. For that is how life seems, secretly, to the woman alone.

ALONE IN DESERT

Her face and figure may be, often are, those of a girl in her 20s, and her tastes and actions may match. But suddenly life, which yesterday seemed as lovely as an open meadow, has become a place of mocking horror.

I know of only one book that answers that peculiar need simply and completely—if only one man who seems to understand it completely. The man is Dr. W. Beran Wolfe.

The book is—"A Woman's Best Years"—just published by Long & Smith. I have mentioned that book before, and shall do so again, for I know of none so desperately needed by women—or their worried husbands.

It says things which have needed to be said for thousands of years—things which no man has ever dared say, no publisher dared print before.

And it gives, to the last dreadful detail, every foot of that hell through which every woman must wander, always in bitter bewilderment, oftimes to end in the dark pit of insanity or suicide.

Death Valley—there it is in all its mockery. But here, at last is something no one has offered women before—a definite road map through its mad mirage. Definite hope and help for ANY woman—if she will take it.

If you are such a woman, if you know such a woman, if you dread becoming such a woman, GET THAT BOOK, though you have to mortgage the radio to do so.

Words of Wise

Observations on the value of peace with other nations are unnecessary. It would be wise, however, by timely provisions to guard against acts of our own citizens.—George Washington.

Be courteous to all but intimate with few, and let those few be well tried before you give them your confidence.—George Washington.

We who desire peace must write it in the hearts of our children.—Paul K. Brandt.

There is no music in a rest, but there is the making of music in it. —Ruskin.

Adopting a Baby
By Winifred Black

Winifred Black

Jeneve's Jimmy has married and gone to another town to live. Her little Jenny is studying art in Paris and Jeneve knows that Jenny will never be happy or satisfied at home again.

And Jeneve's husband is dead and she's really quite alone in the world. And she certainly does hate to be alone.

She's always had her husband and the children and now that they are gone she just rushes from bridge to tea and from tea to dinner and from dinner to the theater or concert or something—why Jeneve even goes to lectures.

CAN'T BE ALONE

She doesn't know what the lecturer is talking about half the time and when she does know she's apt to be a bit shocked, but she goes just the same.

She just simply can't stand it to be alone.

Now, Jeneve, I ask you, why on earth don't you adopt a little boy or a little girl and have the fun of a family again?

His father is dead and so is his mother and nobody cares whether he lives or dies. You can tell that by the look in his big, eager eyes, always looking for something or someone, he doesn't quite know what.

Poor little chap. Why don't you take him home and sit down at a cozy little table with him, not the big dining table in your grand dining room, but just a cozy little table in front of a blazing fire?

Don't have the room too light, he doesn't want to be stared at and he's a little nervous about knives and forks. They had such queer ones at the orphanage.

Don't try to talk him to death the first day. Just be sort of friendly and quiet and smiling; as if you thought the world was a pretty good place and he was a pretty good sort of a boy.

And the first thing you know that boy will open his heart to you and tell you his troubles and if you'll just be half decent to him he'll worship you.

When he grows up—oh, well, he may disappoint you then, but you will have all the years between and they'll be worth while, not only to him but to you. Why don't you try it?

Stars and Stripes

Miami is always bragging about having so much sunshine, still there are times when the sun isn't within 10,000,000 miles of the place.

Norman Davis is called our "roaming" ambassador and also our "roving" ambassador. It seems he "romes" when in Rome and "roves" when he's anywhere else.

New simile: "As uncertain as a weather forecast."

Cape Codders are clashing over choice of names for the new canal bridges. A bridge by any name will serve traffic.

Every unsuccessful farmer is apt to think he has some of that "sub-marginal" acreage Uncle Sam plans to buy.

What has become of that bill to take the postoffice "out of politics?" Five hundred thousand postmasters want to vote against it.

We are in favor of giving Babe Ruth all he wants and letting him give it back in income taxes. The new era is one of give and take.

Why does Secretary Wallace want a more elastic Constitution, when the one we have will stretch a mile before it will tear an inch?

Garden of Eden Oil
Human Side of the News
By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBETROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Ripping through "the courts where Jamshyd gloried and drank deep," stirring the bones of dead Nineveh and Tyre, slashing through the Garden of Eden, the world's great oil moguls slam a pipeline 1500 miles from Iraq to the Mediterranean—straight through the Bible land.

Edwin C. Hill

The apples which grow above the earth made a lot of trouble. The oil which lay under the earth may make more, unless man has gained wisdom with all those centuries ebbing away, like the Tigris and Euphrates and the Jordan, now bridged by the pipe-line.

The oil of the Garden of Eden is a new focus of human destiny—for good or ill.

JAPANESE MENACE

Japan is menacing British markets in the East. Timed with this amazing ascendancy of Japan's great commercial war throughout the world is this British-French-American gush of oil from Holy Land, with the great pipe-line projected and built under the leadership of Great Britain.

They can now give battle in the markets of the world—armed with a new differential on the costs of powering ships of commerce and ships of war, factories, automobiles, railroads—all the weapons in the battle of yen, pounds, francs and dollars throughout the world.

The "Arabia Felix" of Roman times, not so felicitous under the tramp of marauding hordes down through the centuries, is now the synthetic state of Iraq, carved out of desert kingdoms by the Treaty of Versailles.

The story of sovereignty in Arabia is pretty much the story of oil. The desert chieftains fought for the land of rose and musk, and killed one another off in the encounter.

That war-time epic, "Lawrence in Arabia," tells of the heroic fight of Feisal to fashion a unified Arabia in the blast furnace of war.

He fought on the side of the Allies. England promised him his Arabian kingdom. But they withheld Palestine, and he was king only for a day—French bayonets drove him from his throne.

Lawrence renounced British diplomacy and all its works and hid himself away as "Aircraftman Shaw."

All the treasure of the caliphs, all the plunder of the "Thousand and One Nights" is as the widow's pence compared to those riches. But it was locked in a desert wilderness.

That priceless differential of profit was at stake in flooding this oil out into the world instead of carrying it across those savage deserts.

The companies which planned and carried through the pipe-line and which now own and control it were the Anglo-Persian, the Standard Oil, the Royal Dutch Shell and the French Compagnie Francaise des Petrols.

Engineers of all those countries built the line, one of the greatest feats of modern engineering, carried through in about three years.

LOOKING AHEAD

Big business looks ahead. These companies were on the job 15 years ago at Versailles; there they engineered the building of the oil state of Iraq and then obtained the basic concessions which they are now using.

Iraq, even without oil royalties, has a balanced budget. The king isn't much at figures and lets the British and French worry over the accounting. But not all is rosy in the old Kingdom of Decopolis, as the Romans called it.

Christians and Mohammedans take each other on for a battle on the slightest provocation. There are rows and conspiracies among the Assyrians, Kurds, Persians, Armenians and Indians.

Old Sennacherib, gaudy ruler of this ancient land, where sprang the earth's first great cities, built some eye-filling palaces. But now could lose all of them in Rockefeller City—with oil flowing from the earth only about 75 years.

Worth-While Books
By Hendrik Van Loon

The beauty of life is its utter lack of logic.

Wherefore, I fear that all those delightful and highly reasonable schemes for a well-ordered existence, which now come tearing in such vast profusion from the presses of the land, are doomed to pathetic failure.

For all of these Utopias, alas, are based upon the assumption that at some day in the not distant future mankind will be absolutely reasonable and logical in its behavior, and then at last we shall dwell in Paradise.

If that day should ever come, which I have good reason to doubt, we would be as miserable as kings. We would perish from sheer lack of any sort of excitement.

We would be able to prophesy everything that everybody would ever do under all possible and impossible circumstances. We would yawn ourselves to death.

No, it is the element of chance, the constant feeling of uncertainty and eternal curiosity about the problematic wonders that may lie hidden just beyond the outer mountain ridges of the known and the predictable that keep us interested until the very end.

SPIRIT OF CURIOSITY

Three months ago, when it seemed that the newspapers would have to look for another scribe (no difficult job), the thing that pulled me through (except my never-sufficiently-to-be-praised nurse) was my hungry sense of curiosity.

Of course, I still vaguely felt that I ought to play the game, but I felt no deep sense of obligation towards a game into which I had been forced without having been asked whether I liked to join or not.

But oh, for the blessed spirit of curiosity! After all, if I got better, something really satisfactory and interesting might still happen.

And so I came back to life.

The beauty of life is its utter lack of any logic, and to those who want to follow up this idea I most heartily recommend two books that have appeared during the last few weeks.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON

One is a life of Napoleon III and the other is the biography of pediculus humanus (the common, every-day louse to you and me) and his little friend the bacillus that causes typhoid.

Professor Sinsser in his "Rats, Lice and History" shows us how his beloved little bugs have influenced the events of the last 3000 years more thoroughly and dependably than the world's greatest generals, statesmen, philosophers or economists.

While Alfred Neumann in "Another Caesar" has performed a psychological autopsy upon the memory of a princeling who, without any visible means of support, as far as his personal character was concerned, yet managed to do what his famous uncle had not been able to do, and who made Paris more of a center of the world's social and artistic civilization than it had been since the days of Louis XIV.

In their general approach these books are as different as Hoover and Roosevelt. The bug-professor is a damnably intelligent fellow. We know that as soon as we open his book.

As for Neumann, you either like his style or you do not. I happen to like it.

But these two books complement each other most beautifully, for they prove clearly what a marvelously interesting and amusing world this is. Lice and emperors and rats, all of them created for just one purpose—to make the history of the human race a glorious record of logical illogicality.

Isn't It So?

The elevator to success is not running. Take the stairs.

If you want more business, you must not only organize, but agonize as well.

You can reckon the acorns on the oak tree, but not the oaks in the acorns.

If you want peace, love your neighbor.

We may get what we want, if we only want it enough.

Much of our misery is due to our doubts.

The mill cannot grind the corn with the water that has run by.
